IS THE ONLY

DEMOCRATIC NEWSPAPER

IN THIS DISTRICT.

With the commencement of a New Year we also begin one of the most important political contests in which the people of Kentucky have ever been engaged. The "Opposition" are rallying for a death struggle. They cannot and do not hope to carry the State; but they will assail every exposed point; and in some of the precincts, counties and congressional districts, they expect to succeed, thus perpetuating for a time their pernicious existence. They must be allowed to succeed in no place. They must be rebuked and defeated every where. The South must enter into the great, decisive conflict of 1860 with a solid front—united as a band of brothers. Though the final triumph is certain, democrats must not rest upon their arms—they must make the victory complete, crushing, overwhelming. Our candidates for the various offices, our orators and speakers, will go before the people to urge them to the performance of duty; but there is another and greater power which must be invoked. The voice must exert its silent, but invincible, influence in behalf of our noble cause. Democratic newspapers must be spread broadcast over the land. Members of the democratic party must make amends for the neglect with which they have ever treated this great power. They must encourage the newspapers in the interests of their party—they must exert themselves to give circulation and influence to their greatest ally.

The EXPRESS appeals particularly to the democracy of the Ninth Congressional District, to whose interests it is especially devoted. No labor, no pains, no expense will be spared to make it worthy of the best and truest democrats in the Union.

It begins the New Year with SEVENTEEN COLUMNS of reading matter in each number, political, literary, and agricultural, adapting it to all classes, making it as welcome to the parlor as to the workshop, as useful to the farmer as to the politician, as pleasant a visitant to the girl in her teens as to the candidate on the hustings.

It also, contains each week the very latest Cincinnati Produce and Grocery Markets, and reliable and correct reports of the Maysville Markets to the hour of going to press.

It is mailed regularly to single subscribers at the exceedingly low price of

ROBERT McKEE, Publisher,

☞ We are not disposed to complain, we scarcely feel any importunate to the Knownothing Home, Frankfort, during our recent visit to that city, it such that we feel it our duty to all our friends who may visit Frankfort, to say that the Knownothing Home is a good house, and that the proprietor is a gentleman.

Political.

The rising politicians of Northern Kentucky, who have themselves, even now, Kentucky politicians, that they are not contending for principles, that they have no character to project, that they are waiting for the spoils of office alone, are just now busily engaged in attempting, by some unknown and undiscovered chemical process, to unite all the incongruous elements they represent, into one harmonious organization, which spoke of and white, blue spirits and gray," black republicans and South Americans, Fremont men and Douglas men, Seward men and Crittenden men. Show men and all kinds and colors of men, representing everywhere of opinion—they all agree in one thing, hatred to democracy, they are equally destitute of fixed political principles, they are equally anxious to hoist the spoils, and are equally immoralized in the means they use to reach them. In Kentucky, where the know nothings have a majority and control the opposition councils, fusion is already agreed upon and officially announced, without regard to the cause. In the Northern States, where the black republicans control, the organization of the new order is more difficult. The black republicans cannot by any means sure that they would be strengthened by the addition of Crittenden, Bell, Humphrey Marshall, and their co-workers. They tried a fusion with them in 1854, and though it worked very well for the time being, they found it necessary in 1856 to dissolve the partnership. Yet, if these men would join the black republicans in name as well as in reality, and take their chances with their brethren, it would not be objected to.

We presume, however, that even black republican obduracy will yield to know nothing importunity; and doubt not that terms of some kind will be agreed upon by which those who still adhere to the fallen order in the South will be formally transferred to the care and keeping of their Northern masters. The know nothings are determined to fuse—they are compelled to disband their forces or find new allies—and we doubt not they will, after dickering for a time, accept such terms as are offered them, and throw themselves into the arms of their sooty associates. They are now attempting to make a bargain for the distribution of the offices, but even this will fail them; and they will go into the next fight under the piratical flag of Seward, Banks, or Chase, without securing for Crittenden or Bell the second place. We give below an article from the New York Times, which the know nothings call a "conservative" black republican paper.

From this it will be seen, that Seward's Rochester Speech is endorsed by a decided majority of the black republicans, and that the only obstacle to his nomination is the hostility of the know nothing wing of the party, with whom Governor Banks, the Massachusetts fanatic and abolition dissuionist, is a favorite. The Times thinks the Crittenden movement "means something else, as the dominant spirit of the party is fatalistic to Young America," alias Banks. Speaking of the preference of the Northern know nothings for Banks, the Nashville Union and American appropriately remarks: "This is rather unpromising for the coalition unless the know nothings of the South can go with their northern brethren for Gov. Banks of Massachusetts. What do our opposition contemporaries of the South say to an alliance with the friends and followers of Seward? How would they like to fraternize with Mr. Banks and his admirers, who have taken as strong know nothing oaths as any of them, and whom they are consequently sworn to support in preference to all others? They have sworn to vote for a member of their own order.—Banks was one of its founders. They have sworn to abide by the will of a majority.—Suppose this northern majority decide in favor of Banks—the union sliding, abolition, nigger-worshipping Banks—will they give him their votes or violate their obligations?

The Times says:

In the Republican ranks there is even greater difference of opinion in regard to a candidate. The instinct of the party is to nominate Gov Seward, not only as the ablest and most conspicuous statesman of the party, but as its best representative, and the man who has done the most to build it up. In this State the feeling in his favor promises to be nearly unanimous. The principle obstacle grows out of the distinct and strongly pronounced hostility of the Americans, who cast 60,000 votes in this State last November, and whose ruling sentiment is much stronger than their brethren both in this State and elsewhere. The great mass of this party is invincibly hostile to Gov. Seward, and also, though possibly in a less degree, to Gov. Chase, his western competitor. There is a movement on their part, of which the apparent object is to bring forward Senator Crittenden, but which probably means something else, as the general sentiment of the party is favorable to Young America. Gov. Banks is a favorite with them, and if he had not of New England birth, would probably be strongly urged for the nomination.

But a new Republican movement is just announced, which may command attention. It is to nominate Col. Fremont again the candidate, putting upon the ticket with him some live Southern or Southwestern man, like Senator Houston, who has ability, political courage, and the advantage of living in a Slave State. As a general thing, a candidate who has been defeated once is not a favorite for a second time, candidates have extraordinary abilities or extraordinary position. Fremont's large vote in 1856, however, may supply the place of these requisites. But as proof of the strong desire of the party to nominate some representative man, some one whose life gives a guarantee for his opinions and his action, and who has a service for a party that has not present at all events, Mr. Douglas would be the choice of a decided majority of the Republican Party. What changes a year may bring about, we cannot anticipate.—The chances are quite as likely to be in his favor as against him.

☞ We have from the Indianapolis Journal that charges have been preferred by three assignments of the M. E. Church against Rev. W. Daily, of that church, and President of the Indiana State University, the three alleged offences, Int. Drunkenness, Bad Language and Bad Offering to a member of his church for to secure silence.

☞ The Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance will meet in Louisville on the 1st Wednesday next.

Personal.—The Nomination for Auditor.—We tender our earnest heart felt thanks to the Democratic Convention at Frankfort for the nomination for State Auditor. We did not, we frankly confess, hope either directly or indirectly, and only regret that we cannot feel that neither past party services, nor marked qualifications for the discharge of the duties of the office, merited the flattering vote which the 100 positive votes of friends present gave us in that vote. The only return we can make, is the most and greatest exertion in behalf of the democratic principles of our party, to discharge the debt thus imposed upon us.

To the democracy of the "sullen old plain," we are under special obligations—born and reared among them, we know their devotion to party, their fidelity to principle, their truth, their intelligence, and their patriotism. That you have adopted the distinction the State Convention voted for us, is a fact of which we are too proud to allow it to be forgotten—is an evidence of their approval of our course in our present position which we will ever cherish, and ever strive, it may be in vain, to deserve. One of them from our birth, we hope to spend our life in their service, sustaining their friends, struggling with their enemies, mingling our regrets with their should disaster and defeat ever overtake them, and rending up joys with them when their victory perches upon their standards.

Our State ticket is a good one. One better or stronger could not have been made; and there is not a better man, or a truer democrat, on that ticket, then GRANT GEEZE, the candidate for Auditor. This office is one of great labor and peculiar responsibility; and it is fortunate for the party as well as for the interests of the State, that the nomination for this place has fallen upon one so worthy, so capable, and so well qualified in every respect. We hope the fact that two democrats from this district were before the Convention, and that Mr. Green was preferred by that intelligent body to either of them, will entitle him to a greater share of the confidence of the democracy of this portion of the State, and urge them to greater exertions in behalf of one who is so well worthy of their enthusiastic support.

☞ Our neighbor is inquisitive. He is exceeding anxious to find out something about the views of the late democratic State Convention on certain important subjects.—We are sorry he doesn't read the papers. We will see that he is supplied with a copy of the resolutions adopted. We desire that he shall have all the information he wants.—But, it may be, that he is not familiar with the Cincinnati platform, and as that was endorsed, he must have a copy of that, too. We trust he is so well acquainted with Mr. Buchanan's administration, which he has been abusing for nearly two years past, that he will need no information in relation to that. That was endorsed in all its length and breadth. But our neighbor is too inquisitive for one occupying his position. Indeed, under the circumstances, it is sublimely impudent for him to open his mouth on this subject. Have those with whom he acts adopted any platform? What are their views in regard to Squatter Sovereignty?—Do they think Douglas is right? Is it pretended that the "Union Opposition" are agreed upon any measure? Does the Eagle endorse the doctrines of Douglas' Freeport speech? Does it disavow them? How long have our organization any policy, upon any subject, which it will avow? And yet our neighbor, modest man! who acts with those who declared that whigs—whigs led by Henry Clay and Daniel Webster—had been guilty of "atrocious acts," and asserted that they would not be responsible for the "VIOLATED PLEDGES" of the friends of those venerable Statesmen, talks of "Americans and whigs" and slinks, stirrers in vain, to believe that sincere know nothings and men who were honest whigs will, or can, unite upon a platform which contains no principle which was maintained by either, and which advocates no measure that either believed essential to the welfare of the country. To entertain this belief, one must have lost confidence in the honesty and manhood of his kind—must believe that whigs are corrupt and know nothings unscrupulous. When our neighbor attaches himself to any party, we care not what it is, which has the honesty and the courage to make known its position, authoritatively, upon the question of slavery, we pledge ourself to give him all the information he can desire, either in regard to our position or that of our party.

☞ Thornton F. Marshall is the democratic candidate for State Senator in the district composed of the counties of Bracken and Harrison. Mr. Marshall is deservedly a very popular gentleman; and we congratulate our political friends on their good fortune in securing a candidate who is in every way so worthy of their support. We confidently expect his election by a very decided majority.

☞ We have received the first number of the South Countryman, a new agricultural monthly, published at Marietta, Ga., at $1.00 a year, by W. H. Hunt, and edited with ability by O. W. Howard. This is one of the few agricultural periodicals published in the Southern States with which we have no quarrel, and we are happy to say that this appears to be eminently deserving of all the patronage it proposes to receive. Each number contains 32 pages and is it gotten up in elegant style.

☞ The Democracy will find in our regular printed form, the Louisville Democratic Platform, and a number of other matters of fact smaller paper. It is laborious, costly, and unsatisfactory, and it is not only one of the best papers in Kentucky, but it ranks among the best in the Union. It is indispensable to its circulation, we are glad to learn, it is growing with extraordinary rapidity; but its circulation cannot keep pace with its influence and usefulness. These have grown up so fast, that it is impossible to do them justice in a sheet of this size. We hope to be able to do it in future, if we can find a sufficient number of subscribers to secure silence.

☞ The nomination of Isaac Shelby for Governor, and Mr. Roberts for Lieut. Governor, is a strong one. Douglas.

Is this true? If so, it is a great misfortune to the Democratic party. The Express, before the nomination, was for Magoffin support.

Our candidate has pledged himself in no case to support Douglas, and we are anxious to know why, what, and of a distinct, he will deny between Mr. Douglas and his fellow-democrats.

We had not heard that Mr. Magoffin's nomination was claimed as a triumph of the Douglasites, and any such claim, without any foundation whatever. Whether Magoffin or any other man upon our ticket supports Mr. Douglas in his opposition to the administration, approves his past course, or even published with his present anti-democratic views in regard to slavery in the Territories. We have endorsed our ticket in the strongest terms. Resolutions we know it is composed of good and true men; but if there was one name upon it which would lend its influence to sustain Douglas in the course he is now pursuing we would unhesitatingly strike it from the head of our columns. The advocates of Squatter Sovereignty properly belong to the "Union Opposition," and when they call themselves democrats they are deceiving to sell under false colors. There is no candidate upon our ticket who does not endorse the Cincinnati platform and approve its policy and sustain the acts of the present eminently national and patriotic administration; and they are to be pitied for their ignorance, or detested for their baseness, who make such claims as that to which the Eagle refers, if any such there be.

☞ The Senate has sat for the last time in its old Chamber; it will now occupy commodious spacious, more suitable, and more ornamentally furnished. But with all these appliances, can the present body properly lay claim to the talent, the genius, the wisdom, the eloquence, the eleganse, and the prestige of the "Old Senate"—the Senate that was some twenty, thirty, or fifty years ago? Where are the Pinkneys, the Rufus Kings, the Clays, the Webster, the Calhoons, the Claytons, the Ewings the Poindexters, the Prestons, the Haynes, the Silas Wrights, and the McDuffies? True, we have a few of the spirits there still: Mr. Crittenden, the Bells, the Simmonses, the Footes, the Collamers and the Fessendens; but though there is much talent in the present body, it lacks the dignity, the gentlemanly decorum, the high-toned manners, the self-respect, and the prestige of "the old Senate" and I fear that the new Chamber is not destined, at least in my day, to hold another "old Senate."

We take the above from the Memphis Eagle and Enquirer, one of the principal opposition papers in Tennessee. It will be noticed that the writer claims for the Opposition all the talent in the Senate; and in enumerating the "few noble spirits" in that body, he has no place for Hunter, Davis, Bigler, Bright, Green, Benjamin, Mason, or any other democrat, though those we have mentioned are unquestionably among the ablest and best of the Senators; while Bell and Crittenden, Southern know nothings of but moderate abilities, are classed with Foote, Simmons, Collamer and Fessenden, black republicans of the darkest hue, fanatics of the worst stamp, who are not among the strongest and best men in the Senate, as the great men of the country. Why this desire to give undue prominence to such men? Why should Southern know nothings exaggerate the talents and influence of these bold, bad leaders of the fanatical enemies of the South? Are they preparing the public mind to see these agitators placed at the head of the proposed 'Union Opposition?'

We will soon see.

☞ The Eagle thinks it "strange" that democrats are not offering to bet on the election of their State ticket. The Eagle has strange notions sometimes. The truth is, democrats like to win money from their political opponents; but they have some respect for the feelings of others; and they do not feel disposed to exult over a prostrate foe by making propositions which they know will not and cannot be accepted. We assure our neighbor, who lewingously "whistling to keep his courage up," that whenever any of his political friends feel disposed to make a proposition to bet against a majority of TEN THOUSAND for the democratic ticket, they have only to name it, and a prompt acceptance will test their sincerity.

☞ The notorious Montgomery, the leader of a band of common robbers, has been committing numerous depredations in Kansas; and he claims to be the sympathy of the republicans—those "conservative" black republicans whose "modified" views are so satisfactory to the know nothing central committee—his banditti have defied the laws and are fortifying themselves for the purpose of resisting its execution. Wonder if Kentucky know nothings do not agree with their Northern confederates that it would be very wrong for the Governor of Kansas to disturb these cowardly outlaws?

☞ The Democracy of Louisville, who have been for several years deprived of their rights as citizens, by the villainy and tolerance of their opponents, are organizing and preparing for the approaching contest in February. They expect to carry the city at the municipal election in April next. They have the strength, and can succeed if they will it. We expect them to do their duty and their whole duty.

☞ Hon. John L. Robinson, U. S. Marshall of Indiana, broke his cane over the head of a black republican named Colgrove, for imputations on his integrity. It was a good deed well done.

☞ We have received the January number of the Genesee Farmer, one of the oldest and best agricultural papers in the country. It is published monthly, at FIFTY CENTS A YEAR, each number containing 32 pages, and each volume making a book of 384 pages. It is ably conducted, and is the best of the kind in the world, and has attained an extensive circulation. The family good

The Kentucky Flag.

The next Senator-ship.

At the next August election the democratic party will elect a Senator of Bourbon and Nicholas to fill the place of Mr. Bowman, who will be called upon to elect, for the first time within our recollection, a Senator of their choice. This they can do and will do when the day of election comes round. The question is as to the candidate, and the manner of selecting him. At the county meeting held in this county, appointing delegates to the Frankfort convention, a resolution was adopted inviting the democracy of Bath county to take into consideration the matter, and meet the Bourbon delegation at Frankfort, with authority to select a candidate. The great press of business, and only one day for its transaction, prevented the delegates from the two counties from an exchange of feelings and sentiments upon the subject. The Bourbon delegation, however, held a meeting and unanimously recommended Col. John A. Prelifet from county as a fit and proper for State Senator. Col. Prall is a sterling life-long democrat, a gentleman of the finest talents, an accomplished popular orator and will make, if he should be selected our candidate, an able and successful canvass. The democracy of old Bourbon have struggled more than thirty years in a hopeless minority. Some of them think they have not had either in the Senate or House, a representation of their own choice. Should the democracy of Bath (as we have heard) intimate that they may be inclined to concede to this country the candidate, we will regard it as a high compliment and at the August election, will poll such a vote as will cause the friends of our high appreciation of their courtesy.

Should the views herein expressed meet the approbation of the democracy of Bath, Col. Prall will, by common consent, be regarded as our candidate, and at the proper time will enter upon the canvass.

OPPOSITION TACTICS—The Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer writes thus:

A strong effort will be made in Kentucky and every other Southern State that elect delegates to Congress next year, to excite the election of Americans. A strong demonstration in these States, it is thought, will have a very favorable influence toward the nomination for the Presidency of Mr. Bell of Tennessee, by the Republicans and Americans. In no other way can the American portion of the Opposition hope to have a candidate of their own nomination. As I said in a previous letter, Crittenden is given up. Bell is the only man in the South whom the Republicans would think of supporting, but they will not support him if they can. Therefore perhaps the mighty efforts that will be made to defeat the Democracy in Kentucky, Tennessee, Louisiana and other Southern States.

☞ We are glad to learn that, in all probability, Col. John A. Prall, of Bourbon, will be the next democratic candidate for Senator from the counties of Bourbon and Bath. Col. Prall is one of the best men in the State. A man of ability, a sterling democrat, an educated and accomplished gentleman, an effective and pleasing orator, he has a bright future before him; and we trust his triumphant election to the Senate next August may be but the precursor of more brilliant political victories.

Important Lecture by Rev. Mr. Nash.

☞ The public will be gratified to learn, that the Rev. Mr. Nash, Rector of the Episcopal Church in this city, will deliver a lecture in that Church on next Thursday night. The subject of the proposed discourse—The influence and necessity of Christianity as the organization and service of civil government—is one of the most important that can claim the consideration of philosophers, statesmen and intelligent citizens generally. The writer of this has enjoyed the advantage of hearing this lecture, as delivered elsewhere, and can safely testify to the great learning, research, analysis and application of principles, by which the investigation is conducted, rendering the performance one of the most interesting, instructive and useful ever presented for the benefit of the public. It is hoped, therefore, that our Nash will be honored by a large intelligent and appreciative audience on the occasion of the reproduction of his able lecture.

LEWIS CUTTING, JR., Dec. 27, 1858.

Editor Maysville Express:

Since the storm is beginning to rage in the political sky, and justice and right demands, that selfish interest, hypocrisy and fanaticism should receive its single and just reward, we have only to revert to the proceedings of our political opponents, in order to ascertain whether the interests of our State and government, or a selfish desire to obtain political power, is the theme that actuates them to move onward in their career. At the present time, we can appropriately assert, that notwithstanding their boasting of the nationality of their party principles, and the vile denunciations and epithets pronounced against the democracy, of the United States, there is in existence but one great national party, being in measure upon the principles contained in the Federal Constitution; and that is none other than the old and time-honored party, familiarly and justly known as the democratic party. The Republican party has its existence on a sectional basis, and its principles, with certain interests of that section of the Union to which it exists. There is another party, that, by the exercise of secrecy and darkness, proposing to be conservative in principle, upon the rules of the whig and democratic parties, and adopting that in name responsible for the political sins of the United States of today, which has brought the Republic to ruin, and is undoubtedly at variance with the principles avowed, under the cover of the American party." This party, in consequence of its secrecy, avoiding having a platform, or an organization, is known only as the Republican party of the north, in most full form its sectional position; and yet, it appears to be the only party upon which to place reliance, in the future redemption. Therefore, this party is only known as a political party, in the north.

In consequence of the assertions during the Presidential campaign of 1856, it has been a matter of doubt with the democracy of the Union, whether the Republican party of the north, was not a party, in principle, and in fact, the same with the Democratic party, and being almost unanimously opposed to the Democratic party of the South, and fearing that the Republican party would be the ruin of the Union, they voted for Buchanan, in preference to Fremont, and saved the Union. Since the election of Buchanan, the Republican party of the north, has made full form its sectional position; and yet, it appears to be the only way to place reliance upon it, in the future redemption of the Union

THE EXPRESS.

THE Dunn County Mystery.—The little daughter, her mother, of late, and doubtless, dead. It was had parting with the pet favorite of the household, the little girl, with her long, silken tresses, light-hearted, rosy cheeks, how could she be given up? Between the little girl and her mother there had always existed, not a relationship merely, but the love of congenial natures. He fell on his knees by his daughter's bed side, and wept. Mister Lemon, there is no way to say, but could not. "Thy will be done!" It was a conflict between grace and nature, such as he had never before experienced. The strife disturbed the child, who had lost long apparently unconscious.—She opened her eyes and looked distressed.

"Papa, dear papa," said she as he bent over her, "Mr. Lemon, the angels are sorrowful for thee, striving for composure."

"Thy mother is laid in faint hollow fence, Thou shalt see her! I feel, papa, I feel it!"

"Hush, dear, be quiet!" he replied in great agitation, for he feared delirium was coming on.

"But please, papa, how much do I cost you?"

To sooth her, he replied, though with a shaking voice: "Well dearest, perhaps two hundred dollars. What then, darling?"

"Because, papa, I thought—maybe—you would lay it out this year in Bibles—for poor children—to remember me by."

With such delicate instinct had the dying child touched the springs of comfort! A beam of heavenly joy glanced in the father's heart, the blinds of cone sadness flying off mingled with his life. Self was forgotten—the sorrow of parting, the lonely future.—Naught remained but the mission of love, and a thrill of gratitude that to it he and his beloved were co-workers.

"I will, my precious child," he replied, kissing the brow with solemn tenderness.

"I will, dearest, after a pause, "I will do it every year as long as I live. And thus my Lillian shall yet speak, and draw hundreds and thousands after her to Heaven!"

The child's very soul beamed forth in a long-loving, smile-gaze into her father's eyes; and still gazing, she fell asleep. Waking in five minutes, she spoke in a low, loud, clear voice, and with a look of ecstacy:

"Oh, papa, what a sweet sight! The golden gates were opened, and crowds of children came pouring out. Oh, papa, I knew them! And they run up to me, and began to kiss me, and call me by a name. I can't remember what it was, but it means 'Beloved for the Father's sake.'"

She looked upward, her eyes dreamy, her voice died into a whisper, "Yes, yes, I come!; and the spirit from lay there untenanted of the lovelier spirit.

John Lee arose from his knees with a holy triumph on his face.

"Thank God," said he, "I am richer by another treasure in Heaven!"—Macedonian.

COUNSELS FOR THE YOUNG.—Never be cast down by trifles. If a spider breaks his web twenty times, twenty times will he mend it again. Make up your minds to do a thing, and you will do it. Fear not trouble come on upon you; keep up your spirits though the day may be a dark one.

Troubles never last forever,
The darkest day will pass away."

If the sun is going down, look up to the stars; if the earth is dark, keep your eyes on heaven. With God's presence and God's promises, a man or child can be cheerful.

"Never despair when fog's in the air,
A sunshiny morning will come without warning.'

Mind what you run after! Never be content with a bubble that will burst, or a firewood that will end in smoke and darkness; but that what you can keep, and which is worth keeping.

"Something sterling that will stay
When gold and silver fly away!"

Fight hard against a hasty temper. Anger will come, but resist it strongly. A spark may set a house on fire. A bad temper may give you cause to mourn all the days of your life. Never revenge an injury:

"He that revenegh knows no rest,
The much proverb proves a proverb test."

If you have an enemy, act kindly to him, and make him your friend. You may not win him over at once, but try again. Let one kindness be followed by another. Let you have conquered your end. By little and by little great things are completed.

"Water falling day by day
Wears away the hardest rock away."

And so repeated kindness will soften a heart of stone.

Whatever you do, do it willingly. A boy that is whipped at school never learns his lessons well. A man that is compelled to work, cares not how badly it is performed. He that pulls off his coat cheerfully, strips up his sleeves in earnest, and sings while he works, is the man for me.

"A cheerful spirits gets on quick;
A grumbler in the mud will stick."

Evil thoughts are worse enemies than lions and tigers, for we can get out of the way of wild beas—but bad thoughts win their day everywhere. Keep your heads and hearts full of good thoughts, that bad thoughts may not find room.

"Be on your guard, and strive and pray,
To drive all evil thoughts away."

A DANGEROUS REVIVAL.—In a small town in one of the counties of Ohio a stranger rode up to the door of a tavern, and having dismounted, ordered a stall and some oats for his horse. A crowd of loafers—that class of independent Americans who are never equal to decent men except on an election day—swarmed about the bar-room and shops waiting to be invited up to the counter. Among this crowd, the stranger business was soon once the subject of impertinent speculation. One more impudent fellow than the rest made free to inquire of the stranger what occupation he followed, to which the latter replied that his business was a secret one at present, but that he would make it known before leaving town.

Early the next day, a tow looking around visiting the place where whisky was sold, and making inquiries as to the number retailed, the number of habitual drunkards in the place, the number of dogs kept by men whose children never went to school or had enough to eat; after, in short, making a complete moral inventory of the place, he concluded to leave, and having mounted his horse, was about to be off, when his inquisitive friend, urged on by his associates, stepped up and said: "Now, stranger, you promised to tell us your business before you left, and we'd like to hear from you on that point."

"Ah, well," said the stranger, "I am an agent for the devil; I'm hunting a location for him, and I am glad that I have found a place where it will be a necessary to remove the present inhabitants."

BOWIE KNIFE.—The murderous weapon popularly known from Old Colonel Bowie, a gentleman by whom it was invented, or first used. Col. Bowie distinguished himself in the war of independence in Texas. He showed great coolness in several skirmishes and was killed with Colonels Travis and Crocket, in the attack on the Alamo, in San Antonio.

Col. Bowie lived in Louisiana, but was by birth a Georgian. He became notorious in the South by, on account of a terrible affair in which he was involved, Wright and others, on a bar of the Mississippi. Wright of the blunderbuss, one of the kind so common which has the wounded or have been a man and gentleman, have equal and fitted on alligator.

LOCAL

[illegible] Farmer's.

Preserving Sleep for Winter Use.—Preserving sleep for winter use, and placing it in some place for safe keeping, is a thing of which we know but little of feeding a large quantity, say from five to ten thousand, in a barn, on the plan of a permanent system; third, is the sleep during cold weather, and the temperature of the roots so as not to be so cold as to freeze.

"There is probably no more economical method of keeping roots, and no more convenient one than the place for them, then is what every successful farmer knows, is a good warm basement to his barn, enclosed by a stone wall laid in lime mortar, tightly pointed on the outside, and all sealed for ventilating purposes. This should be large enough not only to stable all his stock, but in one other should be a room large enough to hold his winter supply of roots. This should be partitioned off from the stabling, and lathed and plastered to make it warm. Around this should be erected a tier of shelves for storing the roots. These may be made of scantling, 3 by 3 inches, the length as high as you wish your shelves. The shelves may be framed crosswise, 12 inches square, 6 feet long, and 2 feet apart These should be set up at a convenient distance apart to support the shelves, which are to be laid upon the cross pieces. There should be a door from the stable to the root-room, and a window or windows to let in light, which should open for ventilation in mild weather.

The object of shelves is to prevent a large mass of roots from coming in contact, obviating the danger of fermentation, which will take place if left out so long as will be safe from frost, and properly dried in the sun, may at once be put upon the shelves with safety, if proper attention be paid to the ventilation and any warm weather that may follow.—For want of shelf room, they may be thrown upon the ground between the shelves to the height of two or more feet, and left to dry. For late spring use, and want of other storage, roots may be put into pits through the winter.

No one will think of feeding even a limited quantity of roots without a root cutter, which will cost but a few dollars.

Roots, to keep best, should be kept as near as possible to the freezing point, but not quite reaching it; and in fact a slight "nip of frost" does not seem to materially injure carrots. They would be best suited for stock at a temperature of 50° though they do not injure stock at a much lower temperature. This could only be obtained, during the winter, by artificial heat. For this purpose, a stove would be put in the root-room to raise the temperature a little, and to prevent freezing in extreme cold weather.

TRENTON FALLS, N. Y., Dec. 1858.

In preserving and storing roots for winter use, I prefer a cellar under the barn, building intended for the young animals, of the size of the building, dug, if the ground will admit, six or seven feet deep, and built up of stone or hard burnt brick. The inner part of this basement I would use for a root-cellar, and the outer part to tie up the cattle in. By this plan you have the cattle and roots in one building, in the same floor. You can have division in the root cellar to store all the different varieties of roots, so that you can feed any kind you wish. You can then to the cattle in the morning, and without going out into the cold. Roots can be put in easily by slides from the outside of the building, or by a trap door from above.

As many may not have a cellar under roots whose buildings are already put up, a building may be put up above ground expressly for a root-house, placing it where it will be most convenient to where the roots are to be fed. Wood may be used for the walls of a root-house; yet, if wished to be durable, they ought to be of stone or brick. After the walls have been raised, rafters about six inches deep should be put on, rafters closely sheeted with inch boards on the under side; then, before or as soon as the roof is ready to put on, the vacant space between the outside and inside sheeting ought to be carefully filled with dry sawdust or spent tan-bark, and the roof shingled over, leaving a dry, frost-proof roof. If this building is much exposed to cold winds, the walls ought to be banked up outside with earth. The door will be made sufficient if placed in the end of the house, and there should be double doors, with a space of three or four feet between them, as that will more certainly keep the frost out, and more easy access; or, the door may open into the stalls where the roots are to be fed.

If the root-house or cellar be small, the roots may be put in pits without any danger; but if the quantity is large, care must be taken to have them thoroughly ventilated to prevent heating, sprouting, and decay. If the root-house is large, it may be so made through the middle of the building, and the roots filled in on each side and across one end. This plan takes up much room, and is a simple method of ventilation is by a square tube, six to nine inches in diameter, perforated with holes placed so as to be in the center of the pile of roots, with a tube reaching to the top of the roof. The aperture in the roof should be closed as soon as the weather is cold. The perforated horizontal air-box will be made in sections which can be removed as the roots are taken out. Care must be taken to have the roots kept dry, as wet and damp soon cause rapid decay.

Roots can be safely preserved in pits, if well covered with straw and about a foot of earth. If not wanted till spring, they are as well in pits as in a house, but are inconvenient to get at in frosty weather. W. R.

Coburg, C. W., Nov. 1858.

Through the long, severe winters, it is evident that stock must do better if well provided with plenty of roots. To secure these, requires some skill in constructing a building so as to have free access to them through the winter. A barn on a side-hill, if possible, is best, having all the cattle underneath, with a root-house behind, and doors opening from the cattle into the roots. Roots, 40 by 60 feet will hold four rows of cattle containing fifteen head in a row, seven double stalls and one single one, allowing two feet for each animal. These roots may be filled up for cattle, and the middle compartment for sheep, with a root house behind, 10 by 30 feet, or larger if desirable. This makes a very convenient compartment place for cattle and sheep, and a root-house holding 3,000 bushels. It may be enlarged to the length of the barn if necessary. The stalls should be on the side of the barn, fifteen feet wide, leading toward the center. In front of the stalls may be passage-ways four feet wide, leading from the stables around the center space, from which the feed can be placed in the troughs on either side. Hay, straw, &c., can be put down through trap-doors from the threshing floor above.

A very good plan, where only two or three feet of side-hill can be obtained, is to construct a stable on the side-hill, leading off well, with a stable for cattle on the side, and a root-house in the center. In this case the root-house will be above the ground and exposed to cold, unless made with double walls and filled in with sawdust, or spent tan bark. Any space not occupied with stalls, can be profitably used with movable pens for sheep and young stock.

Neither of these plans are adapted for horses, which, I think are better in a wood shed, properly shaved, and well ventilated.

I have had much experience in putting roots and always find success in keeping them with frost or by heating so as to rot. My one rule is, if roots are put in pits, they will pay them to build root-houses, and have them large enough rather than turn the roots out in the winter. Roots in a root-house are no warm. Airing makes them keep better. I have 8,000 bushels of beets this year all open into sheep and cattle stands, so we are not exposed to cold, and have no drifts to cut through to feed the stock, and by root-house I mean a building to hold roots.

A stone root-house can be built along side of any cattle shed, with upper floor covered with tan bark, leaving a small space between tan bark, with an entrance door into cattle and sheep shed, and roofed and shingled, making a durable structure, and one that would be warm and dry. Always cover the roots with tan or fit for fattening, which should always be got in on a dry state to keep well. J. KIBBY.

Guelph, C. W., Dec. 1858.

REMARKS.—The foregoing essays will be read with interest, and it is to be hoped the importance of the subject will induce others to give their brother farmers the result of their experience in growing, storing, and feeding roots. Most important of all, relative to the different kinds of roots proper to be grown, their value for food and the best manner of feeding them. EDS.

HINTS ABOUT BREEDING.—There can be no doubt but that the attention of farmers and others who have a taste for the science is a good deal awakened to the importance of breeding from the best kinds of animals. "This feeling is now telling forth the careful attention of farmers to the blood of the animals from which they breed, as well as to form and qualities which belong to the race from which they have their origin. While a great improvement may be reasonably expected from these causes, there is an error which is not unfrequently committed by those commencing to breed fine stock, which ought to be amended.

Many persons think, if they have a fine colt, or calf of superior blood, that the more food it gets, the better it will be. But this is a mistake. The young animal requires the milk only of its dam, if that is an average quantity and quality. It is true they will, as they increase in size, take more milk, if offered them, and they will take on a great deal of fat. A colt, or calf, pampered in this way, has an unhatural growth. They are over-fed, and the muscles are not well developed as in animals less stimulated with rich food. Nature is the great teacher, and those who neglect her counsel will be very sure to find out their mistake. A young colt, a calf, a lamb, wants nothing for some months after birth but the milk of the dam and fresh pasturage, with free scope to leap and race at their pleasure, thus stretching to the utmost every muscle, gaining strength, healthy development and symmetry, with well-fed flesh. Over-feeding is not probably so common as under-feeding. But it is an error into which good farmers and good breeders sometimes fall. They have a fine young animal, and feed it to make it very extra, and high feed will often deceive pretty good judges. Many a common calf has taken the premium, not because it was the best, but because it was the biggest and fattest. By careful enquiry you would perhaps find that it had taken the milk of two or more cows, for a considerable part of the season.

The continuance of high feed for a few generations, with little exercise, will destroy the good qualities of the breed of animals. They lose their symmetry of form, which depends on the proper action of the muscles, and become barren and worthless.—L. in Am. Stock Journal.

WINTER CARE OF HENS.—Keep the hens in a warm, clean place, where they can have a dust bath and sun whenever it shines. Feed them regularly, with a variety of food, such as corn, which may always be before them, wheat, buckwheat, potatoes, and potatoes mixed with cob meal—that is, corn and cob ground together; and give them access to plenty of gravel, old plaster, or broken oyster shells. Give them a dust bath they may be fed to them occasionally, if convenient. Add to these plenty of clear water, and pork or beef scraps or bits of fresh meat two or three times a week, and you will not fail to find your fowls profitable.

Domestic Economy.

FOR BUCKWHEAT CAKES.—I have used a number of receipts, and think this the best: Take a cowebemen sized jar of dish that will hold more than a wash-bowl full, and mix at night with sour milk, letting them stand until morning; leave a little for seed, and afterwards use sweet milk; add salt, and two-thirds of a teaspoon of saleratus. In all cases where saleratus is used, I think it is much better to defer putting it in as long as possible before cooking. Husband thinks my johnny cake the best he ever eats. (That is the way with some husbands, you know, while others find nothing as good at home as elsewhere. What do you suppose makes the difference?)—Emery's Journal.

WOLVERINE JOHNNY CAKE.—Take one quart of four milk, two-thirds of a teacupful of cream, two-thirds of a tea-cupful of molasses, two-thirds of a teaspoon of salt, finely cut, one egg well beaten, one tea-cupful flour, one teaspoonful saleratus, salt and meal to make it about as stiff as pound cake, Bake quick.—Ibid.

TO COOK FOWLS.—Instead of stuffing in the usual way, take three or four thin slices of salt pork and put them in alternately with the heart, gizzard and liver; then tie the wings and legs down closely, and boil water with salt and pepper until about half an hour before serving; then have a oven; put it in an let it brown nicely, and my word for it, you will be pleased with it.—Ibid.

DEATH OF A SISTER OF ROBERT BURNS.—Isabella Burns, the sister of the bard of the poet, more generally known as Mrs. Begg, died recently at her cottage near Ayr, in her eighty-eighth year. Her husband dying in 1843, left her with a family of nine children. She had an income of about one hundred dollars a year, and maintained herself and family by teaching and sewing. A pension of twenty pounds a year, out of ten pounds was granted to her, and in 1842 a subscription was raised amounting to four hundred pounds, part of which, being invested in her life with the rest, the remainder goes to her children. Mrs. Begg bore considerable resemblance to Robert Burns, and preserved her faculties and spirits to the last.

GOVERNOR FOWLE, of South Carolina, was a splendid lawyer, and could talk a jury out of their seven senses. He was especially noted for his success in criminal cases, almost always clearing his client. He was once counsel for a man accused of horse-stealing. He made a long, elaborate and touching speech. The jury retired, were out half an hour, and then came back in their eyes, proclaimed the man not guilty. An old acquaintance stepped up to the prisoner and said:

"Sir, the danger is past; and now, honey bright, didn't you steal that horse?"

To which Jem replied:

"Well, Tom, I've all along thought I took that horse; but after I heard the Governor's speech, I don't believe I did!"

A man die, shall he live again? A man slain in his sins, shall he live again? and "spring little lower" given to the dumcy, and every day has the morning lilies, and yet the world is marvelous still. This book tells of Jesus.

HOWARD ASSOCIATION,
PHILADELPHIA.

A Benevolent Institution established by special Endowment for the Relief of the Sick and Distressed, afflicted with Virulent and Venereal Diseases.

THE Howard Association, in view of the awful destruction of human life, caused by Sexual diseases, and the deceptions practised upon the unfortunate victims of such diseases by Quacks, several years ago directed their consulting surgeon, Dr. GEORGE L. ROBERTS, to devote his entire time to the study of these diseases, and to form a Dispensary for the treatment of the class of diseases, in all their forms, and to give MEDICAL ADVICE GRATIS to all who apply by letter, with a description of their condition, age, occupation, habits of life, &c., and to furnish medicines poverty, to FURNISH MEDICINES FREE OF CHARGE. It is needless to add that the reputation of this Institute in the Medical skill of the age, and will furnish the most approved modern treatment.

The Surgeons of the Association, in their Annual Report upon the treatment of Sexual Diseases, for the year ending January 1st, 1858, express the highest satisfaction with the success which has attended the labors of the Consulting Surgeon in the cure of Spermatorrhoea, Seminal Weakness, Impotence, Gonorrhœ, Gleet, Syphilis, the vice of Onanism or Self-abuse, &c., and order a continuance of the same plan for the ensuing year.

The Directors, on the review of the past, feel assured that their labors in this sphere of benevolent effort have not been misapplied. The afflicted, especially to the young, and they have resolved to devote themselves, with renewed zeal, to this very important and much degraded class.

An admirable Report on Spermatorrhœa, or Seminal Weakness, the vice of Onanism, Masturbation, Impotence, and other diseases of the sexual organs, by the Consulting Surgeon, will be sent (sealed) to any one who requires it, FREE OF CHARGE, on receipt of TWO STAMPS for postage. Other Reports and Tracts on the nature and treatment of venereal diseases, by the Consulting Surgeon, are liable to any so long as the power or periodical may be sent to the Institute. Address, as the Medical Institute, enclosing notice in aid of such removal to the publication office.

Address, for Report or treatment, Dr. GEORGE R. CALHOUN, Consulting Surgeon, Howard Association, No. 8 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia.
