A very pleasant party was given at the residence of Claude Wilson on Tuesday evening of last week. Every one present enjoyed themselves to the utmost and all speak their praises of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson as host and hostesses.

As predicted by the TIMES there was certainly something doing in Olive Hill, Christmas week. White Lightning kept the police court busy and Marshall-Geo. Tabor was kept watching the fires in Hotel de Rest. Nothing serious occurred only the claret forced from a few noses and several eyes were of a dark color. The holidays are over and now for another year of good old fashioned hustling.

About the best resolution you can make this year is to resolve to pay up your subscription. It is but a small item to you and it means but a loss to us.

Poor old Cincinnati is still in hot water. Now that Bossism has lost its hold the Gas Franchise graft is about to do some business.

The state board of valuation and assessment has fixed the tax on whiskey at eight dollars a barrel in bonded warehouses. This is the same tax as last year.

Senator Clark, of Montana, has bestowed one million dollars upon his youngest granddaughter, which was born recently. Keep it up, Senator, 'cause every little bit helps you know.

Speaker, Uncle Joe Cannon, is having a suit of homespun material made. The cloth was presented to Uncle Joe by one of his rural friends whose wife, spun and wove the cloth from the wool grown on the backs of the sheep belonging to her husband.

Poor old Fitzsimmons, as a pugilist, is now a thing of the past. His ring career ended when Obrie bought the gong on Bob's long bout. Fitz, the grand old man of the ring has certainly had a wonderful fighting experience. Out of 366 encounters he has lost but 3.

One of Pittsburg's millionaires lost $72,000.00 in a game of pool, and another $5,000 in a side bet that he could pocket a ball that was a cinch. If some needy individual should happen along asking for assistance 'what do you suppose he would get? Just about six months at hard labor for vagrancy.

The condition of the people of the interior of Japan is really deplorable. The advent of winter has found thousands upon the very verge of starvation. Measures of relief will be taken in Tokyo and assistance from sympathizers will be welcomed. The Japanese as a rule, are a deserving people they are ambitious, inventive, active and efficient, progressive government.

Editor McDermid, of the Mountaineer, has the proper idea of a newspaper, when he says the newspaper represents the community. He is quite right. It takes money to support a paper so let your hand ramble to your money bag and dig out some subscription change for us so we can represent you in a manner of which you may be proud.

Since the organization of the Olive Hill Reading Club, quite a great deal of interest has been shown. We would like for all the reading residents of Olive Hill and surrounding country to join this club.

a member is so small that it will never be missed and the benefit derived will be both instructive and a pleasure to all. For full particulars inquire at this office. This library contains the latest and most popular works of the best known authors. Investigate this it will interest you.

Cincinnati is to have a millionaire street cleaner, that is a millionaire who will be superintendent of her street cleaning dept. He is an enthusiast as well kept streets and Cincy prides herself upon the conditions of her avenues. We wouldn't care what the financial condition of the Supt of the Olive Hill Street cleaning department is so long as some one gets busy and starts something in the street cleaning line here.

Every citizen should discharge some practical duty to his city even though there be some inconvenience connected with it.

It seems as though Russia has not quite enough at being defeated by Japan, and are now capturing English subjects. Better let old John Bull alone. Rush, if you are wise, or after while there will be no Russian on the map.

STREET LIGHTS

It seems that all cars are deftly turned to the appeals made by the people, on East Main Street, for a street light. A street light is needed in that end more than in any other part of town. Several of our leading business men who pay into the town treasury probably as large amount of taxes as any of those now enjoying the benefit and protection of one of those artificial suns, are forced to plod along home, at night, after a hard and toilsome busy days work, through the mud, without the aid of a light, unless he lets HIS light so shine that he may see the few fordable places, and cross "thereover." It is nothing less than shameful, even ridiculous, that the lighted condition of so prosperous portion of our fast growing little city, is in such a plight that could be so easily remedied and with so little cost to any one, and would be so highly appreciated by all benefited.

A. DAMERIN, THE BARBER.

THE DREAM
THE WAKING

And there, in the midst of a chattering, gesticulating, fashionably clad throng, stood Mary, pink-checked, smiling and talking animatedly about art; Mary, in strange, esoteric array, with the train of her clinging rows curled and serpent-wise about her feet, her pretty hair daggard fanned in a pale brown fluff that threatened to drop over her eyes at any moment, and a rose tucked behind her dusty hair.

Could she be that demure, shrinking country girl whom Robert had escorted to rural dances four short years ago? Evidently the painting under consideration was the work of Mary's hands. It was a portrait of an amazingly tall, red-haired woman whose scanty draperies seemed in eminent danger of slipping altogether? Robert looked from Mary to the picture and back several times before his bewildered consciousness grasped the significant fact of her artistic achievement. Then, quite suddenly, Mary turned and saw him.

"Why, Robert, dear!" she cried with unfeigned delight, going forward with outstretched hands. "Robert, indeed, I'm very glad to see you, really! It was not all that he had hoped he would say, or, rather, not the way he had hoped to be greeted. The old exquisite reserve of manner was gone; her ready smile transferred itself from the company to him and unrepudiated sincerity that made it doubly imperious.

"Of course, you'll stay for a little chat about home folks," she insisted. "I live here with Miss Gilbert, my rival in art, and being good Bohemians, we get on swimmingly together."

Robert stayed after the silken throng had thinned out. Mary lit the pink-ringed lamp on the little stand with its half-empty wineglasses, drew up an easy chair, and seated herself where the light fell softly on her pretty, smiling face. She asked all manner of questions about the old friends and her brother, who had fostered her orphaned childhood with paternal tenderness.

"Dick hasn't been in to see me often—only twice, in fact," she told Robert. "But I really don't miss him half as much as I feared I might, because so many other interests have come into my life."

"This is one of the interests, I suppose," said Robert, nodding toward a picture on her desk, the photograph of a man with a handsome, boyish face and eyes of singular, womanish beauty. Mary's face took a delicate reflection of the roses on her bosom and a sudden radiance flashed across her fine eyes, like a gleam of sunlight on still water.

"That's the dearest fellow in the world," she answered, blithely. "A jolly good fellow straight through."

Robert did not trust himself to answer. He picked up the picture and looked closely, but unseeing at the handsome, debonair face of his rival, while he fought down the pain of detecting the look in her eyes when they strayed toward the picture of "the dearest fellow in the world" destroyed the last vestige of his hopes.

"He was a man of fine character, sternly upright and sweet-natured, but slow of speech and singularly reserved. He had loved Mary in patient silence for six years, during which all his hopes had helped him through much toil and disappointment. Now that the realization of his ambition had given him the right to speak there was another man in his light—a man against whom he had not the shadow of a chance.

"Are you engaged to marry him?" he asked presently, in a hard, constrained voice that quiet startled Mary.

"Oh, I need not," she laughed. "We're chums—good fellows. He is a writer, and like most of the tribe, poor and charming. He writes stories about me and poses for my sketches. Neither of us think of marriage. We talked that question all over and came to a sensible understanding."

"And you've given up the idea of marrying?" Robert asked.

"Mary nodded and bit off the tip of the bud she toyed with.

"With a career satisfy you?"

"Perfectly," Mary answered, glibly.

"We live as you see, in a happy-go-lucky, unconventional way. We sell our work when we can; when we can't—why, then, we don't," she laughed with an irresponsible shrug.

"Strike me if you've changed a good deal," said Robert, soberly, after a thoughtful pause.

"I don't like the idea of you living this way," Mary said, the young fellow involuntarily glancing at the wine glasses.

"This is because of your absurdly one-sided view of things," she laughed, good-naturedly. "It is great fun, really. It spoils one for the humdrum life of the old-fashioned woman."

"That is just why I object to it. I'd rather see you happily married and settled down in that you call 'humdrum life' than living as you do here. Couldn't you paint as well even if you were married?"

"Dear no," said Mary, very positively, with a laugh at the absurdity of it. "But that of yourself, Robert? Why don't you take your own advice and settle down?"

"Because," said Robert, gravely, "there is only one girl in the world to me, and she doesn't want me."

"The smile faded out of Mary's eyes momentarily.

"I'm so sorry, Robert," she said simply. Her eyes strayed inadvertently to the picture in his hand, and she wondered vaguely if he was "the only woman in the world" to Ted Hartley."

"The slight Hartley called with the proofs of a story which he wanted Mary to read. It was a brilliantly written sketch of a decadent type, in which a man of the world had wooed and won a less worldly woman.

"I don't like it," Mary told him frankly. "It leaves a bitter taste in the mouth."

"Fave well," said Ted, complacently.

"And, by the way, the story is a true one."

"Are you the hero, Ted?"

"I am," he admitted, unblushingly.

"And the girl—surely she is a myth?"

"Your quondam model, Eleanor Frost."

"Eleanor! And she loves you?"

"Does that surprise you?" Ted asked, lighting a cigarette and leaning back among the cushions of the divan. "Yes, she loves."

"Did you deliberately made her believe that you loved her?"

"I succeeded perfectly, as you will see by the story."

Mary's eyes hardened, and a curious pallor suffused the rose of her cheek.

"Are you telling me the truth?" she asked, in a low voice.

"As this time—yes."

"Now I begin to understand the change in Eleanor. I used to love to have her here, her happy presence was so infectious, so delightfully genuine. Then suddenly she grew miserably grave. Tells me she has lost favor with artists because she no longer takes any interest in her work. So that is your doing, Ted Hartley?" To be able to write well—to analyze life's master emotion—your highest as a man-of-letters. Do you not pride of your achievement?"

"Oh! come now, Meg, you're not growing squeamish at this late day," Ted exclaimed, unrepentantly.

"Squeamish?" she repeated, with measureless scorn. "No, I am not squeamish. I am ashamed to have touched hands with a man capable of such despicable treachery, much more bitterly ashamed to have loved him. Once I thought I cared for you, now I thank God for having spared the greatest misfortune that can befall a woman."

Ted threw down his story and rose, but she waved him back authoritatively.

She clasped her hands behind her, and clasped her hands behind her. She had grown very white, and her eyes had a look that he had never seen there before.

"Don't try to explain your conduct. Nothing that you can say will lessen your guilt, and you please to, now, before I despise you too much."

When the door closed after him Mary sank into the vacant place on the divan and abandoned herself to the luxury of tears, whether of grief or shame or sorrow it would be hard to tell, for she was too bitterly hurt to be able to distinguish clearly what she had always feared in secret had at last come true—that she would wake to his worthlessness.

"She felt suddenly very weary of the glitter and hollowness of Bohemia which had worn away her youth and freshness, and given nothing but a few turbulent pleasures that left a bad taste in the mouth."

She had accomplished next to nothing outside of a living—and now she knew instinctively that she never would realize the old ambitious dream, still, she was young enough and strong enough to outlive her mistake and forget.

It was close upon dusk when the train arrived at Mapleton. She gave her orders to the rustic driver and climbed wearily into the shambling hack which set off at once toward her home, and placed on the outskirts of the village.

Suddenly she called to the driver, who stopped at once obediently. She had long damp grass of the lawn to the great front door, turned the yielding knob and entered the hall. A rift of light from the partly open door of the living room guided her unerringly.

Robert sat before the glowing hearth, his back leaning on the chair back, his hands clasped in an attitude of deepest reflection. Suddenly he looked upward and saw her. A red wave surged across his face and he drew a sharp breath of startled amazement, but he said never a word.

"Robert," said Mary, in a clear, unshaken voice, "have I come back in my right mind—finished with Bohemia for good? Do you still want me?"

He rose and held out his arms, but she hesitated, her face flushing and paling by turns in wavelike succession.

"Mary, I never wanted anything or anyone so much in my life!" he cried.

"Mary smiled radiantly.

"I'm so glad, Robert," she whispered. —Illustrated Bits.

Daisy Armstrong, is reported recovering.

If Olive Hill had a loitering law something similar to that of other cities, it would be found to be very beneficial to the reputation of our town.

J. B. Collier, of Lawton, was transacting business in Olive Hill this week.

People are wondering how Nickie ever mustered up the proper amount of courage to ask Taddie for her.

DEFECTS OF BRITISH NAVY.

Officers Not Well Drilled in Strategy and Tactics.

A serious defect is declared by Admiral Sir Cyprian Bridge to exist in the present administration of the British navy, which, he declares, if not immediately remedied, may lead to disaster in time of war. "The principal fault," he said, "is a vitally important one. It is that the higher officers of the navy, who in the past of a great scale would have to conduct operations, should not during periods of peace have their minds so occupied with the study of material that no time is left to study and consider the great question of strategy and tactics. Without familiarity with which success in war is hardly to be looked for."

If you have a particular administrative system running, perhaps for years in peace time, it will be extremely difficult and full of hazard to endeavor to change it on the instant of war occurring.

"Under our existing administration," he warlike out either the higher officers would have the tremendous duty of conducting war in addition to the already heavy duty of considering questions of material, or else the whole system would be thrown out of gear by the necessity of reorganizing the consideration of material in order to direct hostilities."

"From the close of the seventeenth century until the fall of Napoleon, the British navy was uniformly successful at sea. The system under which this success was achieved and maintained was one in which there was an absolute and entire separation between the duty of conducting war and the direction of hostilities."

"The Japanese have won great victories on the sea. Yet the many who speak when at the China station before the outbreak of the war show no limitation to positions, strategical and tactical studies to the consideration of questions of material. These, they said, could be profitably studied after by professional experts brought up to deal with them, and not to manage naval hostilities."

CHINA'S CRAFTY EMPRESS

Force and Purpose Characterize Her Actions

HER REIGN OVER CHINA

Born the Daughter of a Poor Military Officer—Fought the Plans of the Board of Regency to Kill the Emperor—Royal and Negotiated Peace Plans in War of 1860.

Her Majesty was born in 1816 being the second of four daughters. Since the beginning of the Manchu dynasty it has been the custom to marry abroad for the proper court officials to select all Manchu maidens between the ages of 12 and 18 who are of sufficient rank to be eligible for the Imperial marriage.

By such a process of elimination and imperial selection Tse Hai at the age of 16 became a concubine of Emperor Hsien-feng.

The Emperor of Hsien-feng was childless, and when on April 26, 1850 Emperor's brother, reigned in Pekin, and with him Tse Hai and her consort were the imperial rejoinders.

The Hai thus became an Empress, plans to kill the Emperor. The French forces captured Pekin and the Emperor's Palace Yuen Ming Yuen. The Emperor Hsien-feng, contrary to the prayers of Tse Hai, fled from Pekin with his court of 16,000 persons, 150 miles northeast of Pekin, among the mountains of Mongolia. Prince Kung, the Emperor's brother, remained in Pekin, and with him Tse Hai and her consort were the imperial rejoinders.

On August 17, 1861, Hsien-feng died from the effects of disipation or suicide, and the son of Tse Hai, 6 years old, was Emperor. By order of the late Emperor the Council of Regency was a board of regency to rule during the minority of the young Emperor. They at once laid plans to kill the two Emperesses and the three brothers of the late Emperor. Then, with the young Emperor in their hands, they would control the Government.

Without giving the Council of Eight time to formulate definite plans of action the two Emperesses and the three brothers were ordered to join the first Prince, led Jehol and with the young child fled to Pekin. Once within the sacred walls of the Forbidden City they decided to Prince Kung the details of the plot against the royal family. This was a rank treason and before this vicious and ill-starred Council of Eight realized any danger they were arrested and brought to Pekin in December, 1861.

The two Dowager Emperesses, with Prince Kung, formed a regency to exist during the minority of the Emperor Tung Chi.

This was established in power the most wonderful of women Tse Hai, at the age of 26. Prince Kung, her faithful counselor, being only 30.

Tung Chi became Emperor in fact in 1872 and reigned gloriously until 1895. Tse Hai was a wild and dissipated youth and never realized the dignity and grandeur of his position. One of his favorite diversions was to leave the palace in disguise and revel in the dives of Pei-ling. As a result of these revels and excesses he contracted a disease, from which he died.

His death occurred late at night. He left no heir and no successor had been appointed. Tse Hai lost all time and took no chances by consultation with her co-regents. The son of Prince Kung was the natural successor, but as soon as Tse Hai was dead aware rushed imperial couriers in the night to the palace of Prince Chun, the seventh Prince of the line of Hsien-feng. He had been 4 years old who was snatched from his home and carried to the Emperor Dowager, who adopted him at once as her son and at daylight summoned the Ministers of State and proclaimed him Emperor, the successor of Hsien-feng.

A change was being forced on China. Her shell of exclusiveness was being opened or broken through.

China was now covered with troubles as with a blanket, and a very wet blanket at that. In 1897 and 1898 German, Russian and Japanese Chou and claimed exclusive rights as to mines and railways over the whole province of Shantung.

Port Arthur was occupied by the Russians and Wei-Hai-Wei by the British.

ANCIENT USAGE OF THE FORK.

On Being Invited Out One Furnishes His Knife and Fork.

The first mention of the use of forks in history was at the table of the Emperor of Burgundy, and he only possessed two, one of gold and the other of silver. At that period the waves of the sea were made cylindrical, they were cut in slices and piled upon a trencher and placed beside the host, who carved himself. The waves of the sea were made cylindrical, they were cut in slices and piled upon a trencher and placed beside the host, who carved himself. The waves of the sea were made cylindrical, they were cut in slices and piled upon a trencher and placed beside the host, who carved himself.

This form of feeding, I understand, generally used in all places in Italy, and in the mountains of the Alps, made of iron or steel, and some of silver; but those are used only by gentlemen. The Italian carries his rule to-day. This ancient custom still obtains among the peasantry of the Tyrol and some parts of the Alps, and they carry their knife, fork and spoon in a case. Sometimes all three are found together, with a rivet through the extreme end of the handle.

After examinations of nearly 10,000 school children, the inspectors of the New York Board of Health, Dr. Darlington says that 40 per cent of them are suffering from defective vision.

Defective vision was the commonest complaint. But bad nutrition and pulmonary and heart ailments were also found to be cause for serious consideration. Medical treatment is needed in many cases, but ordinary care and sanitary precautions are ofttimes sufficient.

A Train A Mile Long.

A party of London Northwestern Railway officials went over the New York Central lines from Boston to Buffalo. They expressed surprise at the number of trains and one of the New York Central men remarked that a train of 110 cars was the longest he had seen on the line lately. Soon afterward a train of empty cars came along, and on counting the cars it was found to be 110 cars on the train. These cars average forty feet in length over all, the train being nearly one mile long, with an average weight of 110 tons and one-half tons per car. The average train of loaded cars consists of eighty cars, with an average weight of about 3,500 tons.—London Chronicle.

EDISON'S OBVIOUS INVENTIONS.

Why He Would Like the Aid of Some Judges.

Thomas A. Edison recently made a suggestion by which a common failing of judges may be turned to account. The patent law demands that an invention shall show more evidences of imagination than are required in the ordinary makeshift improvements that are made every day in machine shops; and yet the simplest devices are the most effective and the most profitable. The inventor's work is often invalidated Mr. Edison's patents on the ground that the improvements made by his devices were "obvious." He has been several times obliged to ask his work as well as how to make it. "No good," he replied Mr. Edison, "but of course the thing is perfectly obvious. I wish you'd bring a committee of those fellow judges down here that are always saying that. If this thing is so obviously obvious, why didn't you ask me how to make it."—Harper's Weekly.

Not long ago Mr. Edison was trying to work out a new piece of mechanism. He was having a great problem when he began it, but it proved to be extremely difficult. After several days' effort, he was about to give up when he was asked by his work as well as how to make it.

Atty. H. R. Dyson, of Grayson, was here on legal business Saturday of last week.

H. H. Day spent Christmas at Gimlet, Ky., visiting with his finance.

The Olive Hill Comedy Minstrel Co. which played an engagement in Grayson last Saturday night was very poorly patronized by the residents of that city.

The show itself was the limit. The boys did not realize enough to pay expenses, and if you are interested as to how they returned home just ask some of the boys.

A superstitious subscriber who found a spider in his paper wrote to the editor asking if it was an evil omen. The editor replied: "It is nothing of the kind. The spider was merely looking over the paper to learn who was not advertising so it could spin its web across the store door and thus be free from disturbance.—Western Publisher.

We are now just entering in upon our second year, and if we are as successful at the end of this year as the one just closed, we will have a paper second to none in the state. But what do we need to be successful? The support of the people! And we feel certain that our people wants to see Olive Hill win in every respect, and win in everything.

Let us strive to make Olive Hill the garden spot of old Kentucky and it can be done with a little push and energy. It takes time of course, but Rome was not built in one day. So let us unite our efforts and surprise some of our sister towns.

In the shade of the old apple tree, I've waited so long, love, for thee, that the voice once I heard, grows faint with each word till it's barely a whisper to me.

There is no more buzz left in the bee, the blossoms are withered, ah, me!—and the tree that once grew where I waited for you has changed to an old chestnut tree. In the shade of the old apple tree, where you hear the blazed buzz of the bee, with a big carving knife that I swiped from my wife, I am waiting—by gee! Of daggers I have two or three and an ax and a cutlass, you see, and I'll stick all these things in the next guy who sings, "In the shade of the old apple tree."

The Olive Hill Fire Brick Company Store has been purchased by A. J. Stamper, R. Blankenship, and H. R. Dysard. The new firm has taken possession.

If some of our business people would quit being so grouchy and subscribe for their home paper, and stop begging from their neighbors' the paper, to learn the news it's a cinch they would be more successful in business.

LA GRIPPE—PNEUMONIA

So many people who have apparently recovered from an attack of La Grippe are stricken with Pneumonia. This is due to the fact that the Bronchial Tubes and Lungs are left weakened and unable to resist disease.

FOLEY'S HONEY AND TAR

not only cures La Grippe Coughs, and prevents Pneumonia, but strengthens the Lungs so they will not be susceptible to the development of serious lung troubles. Do not take chances with some unknown preparation that may contain some harmful drug when FOLEY'S HONEY AND TAR costs you no more and is safe and sure. Contains no opiates.

I had a bad case of La Grippe about ten years ago which left my Lungs so weak that I have been troubled more or less every winter since until I used FOLEY'S HONEY AND TAR, which cured me completely and my Lungs no longer trouble me.—J. H. BROWNING, D.D.S., Orrick, Mo.

G. VACHER, 157 Osgood St., Chicago, says: "My wife had a severe case of La Grippe, and it left her with a very bad cough. She tried a bottle of FOLEY'S HONEY AND TAR and it gave immediate relief."
