"WEDDING" BY THE PRESS.

Everybody has heard of NICHOLAS SMITH, long noted as the son-in-law of HORACE GREELEY than for the personal beauty which not even age wholly effaces. Well, it seems that, having neither estate nor profession, this elegant gentleman has become familiar with pecuniary embarrassments, the whole story of which was printed the other day in a Louisville paper. The Shelbyville Sentinel, printed in the town at Colonel SMITH's residence, thinks that such facts "hardly come within the field of legitimate journalism," by which it means, doubtless, that a newspaper aiming to be reputable should not print them.

There is a line to be drawn, to be sure, but not more clearly in the newspaper than in the conversations of men who aim to be just. "Everybody" is talking about NICHOLAS SMITH's troubles, and it is a most natural thing for the newspaper, which is but a reflex of what "everybody" does and says, to mention the subject. If any member of the community were governed by scruples of charity in referring to another's misfortune, that member might attempt to suggest the silence of the press. But how many men and women are there of this style? In all Shelbyville's doubtless nobody feels it due to propriety that he should fail to discuss "NICK SMITH's private business." But when their conversation is put into cold type, they don't like the reflection and censure the press for unkind meddling.

Now who is going to draw the line as to how far the newspaper shall go in repeating what the people have to say on the street corner or at the church door or at the dinner table? Is this talk and gossip so trivial, or is it so unjust or inaccurate, that the newspaper should hesitate to print the greater part of what is in "everybody's" mouth?

We don't know anything about Colonel SMITH's business, and care less, but it is safe to assert that between the newspaper's mention of the Colonel's affairs and the fact-talk of his own neighbors, the wall is down at the hands of the latter.

The teachers of Lewis county continue to work actively in the interest of self-improvement. Like the teachers of Mason they have organized a County Association, the next meeting of which is advertised in THE REPUBLICAN to-day. We hope that they will be able to maintain their organization permanently and that it will result greatly to their benefit.

Tracing It Back to Abraham.

A.—Do you know where the custom of mothers taking their marriageable daughters to the watering places originated?
B.—I have no idea.
"Well, it dates back to the days of Abraham. You know it was at a well that Rebecca found her husband."

Goodly About Girls.

San Francisco Chronicle.
Most men like modest girls best. Modesty is discretion; that's all. The modest girl won't let you hold her hand when there's anybody likely to see, but she's whole-souled when there's nobody looking and gives you both her hands. I have known young ladies who would squeeze your hand tenderly, look into your eyes, and do everything that was agreeable in the most shapeliest manner before other people, but when they were alone with you they'd sit half a mile off and talk primly about the weather. I don't think those girls would make good wives. At all events, they don't make good sweethearts, and about marrying it is much the same as with boys eating cherries. They lay aside the best to finish up with, but when they get to what they've laid aside they're so full of cherries they don't enjoy anymore. Of course there are boys who eat all the good ones first. But it seems to me all rules work both ways any way and do discomfiture of some kind. The only rule of life experience brings to us is never to lose a chance of fun when we can get it.

Stranger—Ain't there a shorter way to the railway?
Boy—Yes, sir; it's only two miles from Lexington.
Stranger—Where's Lexington?
Boy—Two miles the other side of the railway.
—Ed. Ellis.

Elizabeth by the Hired Girl.

"Madame," he began as the door opened, "I am selling a new book on etiquette and deportment."
"Oh, you are?" she responded. "Go down there on the grass and clean the mud off your feet."
"Yes, 'em. As I was saying, ma'am, I am selling."
"Take off your hat! Never address a stranger lady at the door without removing your hat."
"Yes, 'em. Now, then, as I was saying—" "Take your hands out of your pockets! No gentleman ever carries his hands there."
"Yes, 'em. Now, ma'am, this work on et—"
"Throw out your card. If a gentleman can behave he is careful not to disgust others by the habit."
"Yes, 'em. Now, ma'am, in calling your attention to this valuable—" "Put that dirty handkerchief out of sight and use less grease on your hair. Now you look half way decent. You have a book on etiquette and deportment. Very well, I don't want it. I am only the hired girl. You can come in, however, and talk with the lady of the house. She called me a liar this morning, and I think she needs something of the kind."
—Detroit Free Press.

It Answered the Purpose.

A German, one of whose eyes was severely affected, went to an oculist for treatment. An operation was necessary, and the eye was removed. While waiting the socket, previous to transplanting one from a rabbit, one of the vital organs of the latter being prepared and laid upon the table, a cat stole in, and before any one could prevent had seized upon the rabbit's eye. No other rabbit being at hand to furnish the eye, the oculist waited until his patient had recovered from the state of anæsthesia necessary to the operation, and explained the dilemma to him. "Yah, yah, de katz ate mine eye up, so, vell put an eye of dat katz in mine eye." "Dot katz got mine eye, I vill hat dot katz's eye." The oculist did so for the sake of the experiment, when, to the surprise of the operation was successful and the cat's eye worked perfectly. One day the German met a friend, who said:

"Hans, I hear that you had a katz eye in your head in, how ish dot?" Hans explained the circumstance, and his friend said: "Oh, I see, dot katz got your eye and you got dot katz eye, yah, and how does dot katz eye work? Can you see shut so good as mit de oder?"

"Yah, shut so good, aber at night ven I wants to shloot, dot verlanter eye shut less avnke looking for rats."—Chicago Tribune.

He Was Absent Minded.

"Speaking of absent mindedness," said the hotel clerk to the Expressman, "that hotel fellow sitting over there by the window, sacking his cane, will some day forget that he is on earth, and will come down to breakfast with a sheet wrapped around him, doing the angel act. He's an old bachelor, and has lived here at least ten years. Last night a business man called on him here. He was in great haste. He wrote a note to be sent up to the old fellow's room, and then rushed off."

"That's a very important message."

please see that he gets it." When the call boy got to the room he found that the old fellow had gone asleep in his chair while reading. The room had grown dark. The boy woke the old fellow up, gave him the note, and went out. After failing to find the message, and after going through his pockets with like success, he discovered the note in his hand. "What did the man do but twist it up, right the paper in a pile in the hallway, and after lighting his own gas looked all over his room for the note. He doesn't know what the message was, nor who sent it, nor how important it was, and I have forgotten how the business man looked. He has been smoking that cane over there all day, thinking about it, and cursing the call boy."—Buffalo Express.

He Was Calm.

A young man, wearing good clothes and a plug hat, rushed up the steps of a Grandview street bank yesterday, hurried along to the window of the cashier, and showing to the three people aside, he said to the man behind the window:

"Can you give me five tens for this fifty? I'm in a great hurry to catch the train." The cashier calmly received the bill, gave it one brief glance, and then showed it under a stamp and returned it. It was stamped with a big red "counterfeit."

"You've proved the young man with the good clothes as he hurried out."

"Bats!" replied the cashier; but he was calm—very calm.—Detroit Free Press.

A Chance Meeting.

Upon the street we met by chance,
He and I, face to face,
Each gave the other a sardonic glance,
And each felt out of place.

Such meetings have their share of pain,
And ours was painful, too,
Each feared the other. That was plain,
And still we never drew.

Poor victims we of ruthless Fate!
Fate's victims we are still,
For once I cut him out with Kate,
And he owes me a bill! —Somerville Journal.

Wife of Young Literary Man—Why, George! A hundred dollars for that magazine story! How long did it take you to write it?

Young Husband (nonchalantly)—Oh, I don't know. A couple of days, I suppose.

Wife (excitedly)—Fifty dollars a day! That's $300 a week and $1,500 a month! Twelve times twelve is 144—$144,000 a year! Why, George, we can keep a carriage and horses just as well as not!—Harper's Bazar.

A Steady Improvement.

Mr. Wabash, of Chicago—Have you read Julian Hawthorne's story, "A Tragic Mystery," Miss Breezy?

Miss Breezy—Oh, yes, and I found it very interesting. I think his style has so much improved since he wrote "The Scarlet Letter."—Life.

The New Science of Palmistry.

Maternal land—Palm color and firm, fingers apart. Means danger to the small boy.

Maternal land—Fingers closed, thumb turned in, knuckles prominent. Signifies, "No new bonnet this season."

Boy's hand—Palm open, warts on thumb, fingers stubby and clean. Reads, "I've been at the preserved peaches again."

Young lady's hand—Closed pink palm, soft and warm, ring on index finger. Sign, "Ask papa."—Detroit Free Press.

Different Remedies.

A lady whose husband had a severe cold recommended faked lemonade.

"Fah!" he said, frantically, "a man can't have a cold without everybody suggesting some fool remedy. I'll send for a doctor."

So the doctor came, charged the sick man $2 for his visit and advised faked lemonade.—New York Sun.

His Neighbor.

Young Mr. Slay (to his pretty cousin)—I say, Maude, how did my song, "Home Again from a Foreign Shore," seem to impress the company?

Pretty Cousin—Well, some of them, Charley, looked as if they were sorry you had got back.—New York Sun.
