The Meeting at Lexington.—Mr. Clay's great speech.—Extraordinary Expressions.—The greatest speech ever made!

We present to our readers this morning a report of the great speech of Mr. Clay, at the resolutions of the Convention at Lexington on yesterday.

Note on the Reporter.

Lexington, Saturday, Nov. 13. I regret that I could not be present in consequence of Mr. Clay's opposition to having his speech reported, my mission here is almost entirely exhausted.

The Meeting.

Gen. Linn called for the meeting on the 13th, and hoped that perfect silence might be observed; as it was probably the last time that the illustrious General would ever address a popular assembly.

Mr. Clay then proposed that a President of the meeting be appointed, and that the resolutions be adopted.

Mr. Clay's Speech.

The notes of Mr. Rippey, reflecting the proceedings of the Lexington meeting, will explain why we were unable to give full report of Mr. Clay's speech that we so much desired, and for which he had made the most ample and perfect arrangements.

It will be observed that the position assumed by Mr. Clay in his speech, is that the present war is not a contest for territory, but a contest for the rights of man.

It had been stated over and over again that the whigs were enemies of the country, for opposing annexation.

Mr. Clay continued to talk, at considerable length, upon this topic, expressing his confidence that the Convention would declare, at its coming session, what are the objects of the war.

Mr. Clay said he was opposed to annexing any territory to this country.

Mr. Clay then proposed that a President of the meeting be appointed, and that the resolutions be adopted.

Lexington, Ky., October, 1847.

Dear Sirs:—The notes of the whig party address you, as a whig, to communicate what we believe to be correct, and we hope acceptable and useful information in regard to public sentiment in Kentucky, on the subject of the next Presidential election.

There have been various public meetings at different places in Kentucky, during the present year, at which General Taylor was nominated for the Presidency.

The meeting held in this city, on the 13th of last month, at which most of us were present, was the most successful.

Another example will serve to portray the feelings of the whig party in this city, on the subject of the annexation of Texas.

Mr. Clay then proposed that a President of the meeting be appointed, and that the resolutions be adopted.

Battles of Contreras and Chantelero.

Report of Major General Scott. (Dallas.) HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, SEPTEMBER 21, 1847.

Sir: Leaving a camp at Garrison in Puebla, the army of operations, as directed by General Taylor, was divided into two columns.

On the 12th and 13th we pushed on to Contreras, where we met an insubstantial force of the enemy.

Consequently no divided impression could be formed in the minds of the troops.

Mr. Clay then proposed that a President of the meeting be appointed, and that the resolutions be adopted.

NOT SO FAST—Our contemporary of the Herald, in his paper of Wednesday last, lames and froths not a little, because we happened to quote by his own, that proof that the principles which they once professed to be governed. He seems, indeed, to be endeavoring to work him into a rage on account of it, and, from the tone of his column of articles in relation to the Slaves, so would certainly not do so if it were not for his own reference to him, and our remarks of last week. Such, however, is a mistake, we only quoted his language, because it was in the white dialect and could be more easily understood, and would be more readily believed, perhaps, by our white readers, than had we concluded to do for no other purpose. We had not even the most distant idea of treating upon his text, or of drawing him into controversy.

The Editor of the Herald must have been dreaming when he conceived the idea that we were discouraging him, because he could not be expected to understand it, or could learn from anything which we said. It reminds us of "Corrus Joa," a favorite friend in an adjoining county, who recently said a dream—a very singular dream indeed; and for the benefit of our friends of the Herald, we will here relate it.

Well, Corrus Joa dreamed that he was an eye-witness to one of our best friends, between two old grinnalms of great courage and fortitude. In the fight (as it is just ground of complaint ON THIS PART OF MEXICO THAT THE ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC OF MEXICO IS TO THEMSELVES.")

Comment upon such a discrepancy is altogether useless, as every one will readily see. Mr. Clay is after obtaining a nomination for the Presidency; and it may be that Mr. Webster is after the same thing.
