I. ABSTRACT:

The Appalachian area of Mississippi is inhabited by a great number of adults who have never read a newspaper. Although there are numerous newspapers printed within the Appalachian area, many adults have limited reading levels and cannot comprehend the local newspapers. This Appalachian adult, because of his inability to relate to news of local, area, state, and national interest, is eventually lost in his efforts to succeed in making a better life for himself and his family.

The problems of non-communication, low education level, and isolation of the Mississippi Appalachian people are a concern of the Itawamba Junior College (IJC) adult education department. The Itawamba Junior College Adult Education Department received a grant from the AABEDC, Morehead, Kentucky, to implement a low reading level newspaper to be distributed to the twenty (20) county Appalachian region of Mississippi. The first edition of 500 copies was printed on February 16, 1970. A training session to orient teachers to the uses of a low reading-level newspaper was held in Tupelo, Mississippi, March 28, 1970, with eighty-five (85) teachers and supervisors in attendance. A mailing list was established at this meeting and number of copies had to be increased to 2,000 so that each ABE student in the Mississippi Appalachian region could receive a newspaper.

Professor Gale Denly, Department of Journalism, University of Mississippi, aided in establishing initial reading levels and format and evaluated the Appalachia News after the eight and sixteenth editions.
The Appalachian News has been widely accepted by students and adults educators with numerous requests for the paper from teachers and organization located out of the Mississippi Appalachian region. As a result of this increased interest 5,500 copies of the Appalachia News are being mailed to adult educators and students in the Mississippi Appalachian region, thirty-four states, the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands, and Puerto Rico.

The primary objective of the Appalachia News is to provide supplemental reading material for adult basic education students. After instituting and supervising ABE classes of the IJC Vocational and Technical Education Center, we found that each teacher was using the Appalachia News as an integral part of their curriculum. The teachers reported that students looked forward to receiving each edition of the paper. It is believed that the Appalachia News has and will provide a news media that can be used in Mississippi Appalachia.

II. INTRODUCTION:

There exist in Appalachia a need for adult basic education materials which have a sufficiently low readability level and are relevant to the adult basic education student. Due to the lack of relevant low readability level, materials, the Appalachian adult is left without any form of published communication.

Statistics show that in 1966 approximately sixty percent of the population of Mississippi Appalachia lived in rural areas. According to surveys conducted during this period of time two large poverty groups were identified. The largest group consisted of old-age families. The second largest group was made up of families with a large number of children.

Families in the old-age group have a very low annual income and almost no gainful employment. The reason for poverty in the second group was because of the high cost of supporting a large family.

It was established through statistics that the lack of education is a major factor in low annual income of those groups.

The Mississippi Adult Basic Education Department is offering to the Mississippi Appalachian poor a chance to upgrade their educational level through an adult basic education class administered on the local level. Through these adult education classes a curriculum is taught with the major aim of raising the functional educational level, thereby increasing opportunities for gainful employment.

The Appalachia News is an integral part of the curriculum used by the local ABE teacher.

III. Objectives:

1. To demonstrate that a low reading-level newspaper can be effective as educational device in ABE classes:

   A. Techniques used by teachers

   An in-service training session was held to orient the teachers of adult education with various ways that an adult oriented newspaper could be used.

   A teacher's guide was given to each teacher showing the different methods and techniques that could be used in teaching of various articles in the newspaper. A teacher's guide is included with this report.

B. Utilization by students

Interviews were conducted with a random sample of ABE students. The results showed the majority of the students first liked the crossword puzzle and looked forward to each edition of the paper so that the challenge of a puzzle could be met. The interview showed the next most popular reading area was the articles concerning home and family life, such as the recipes, health information, personal grooming, etc. The local interest articles proved to be the first choice of reading for the particular area which the articles concerns. National and state news ranked as the least important news items.

2. To demonstrate that a low reading level newspaper can be used as a recruitment technique.

Records show that during the period of January 1, 1969 to June 30, 1969, 1084 students were enrolled in ABE classes in the four county Itawamba Junior College district. During the period of time in which the Appalachia News was published, January 1, 1970 - June 30, 1970, 1480 students enrolled in the same junior college district. There was an increase in enrollment of 396 students during the same period of time. The Appalachia News was responsible for a certain percentage of this increase because of the publicity received from other sources concerning the Appalachia News and because of new enrollees reading the Appalachia News received by students presently enrolled. Comments from new enrollees indicate that they enrolled in adult basic education classes because of the presence of the Appalachia News in the classroom.

3. To demonstrate that an Adult Basic Education Newspaper can provide information on employment opportunities, public assistance agencies, and other educational opportunities to the rural ABE student.

Teachers were asked to survey their class and determine the amount of knowledge of employment opportunities, public assistance agencies, and other educational opportunities that their students ascertained. The survey showed that the student had little or no information on social security, food stamps, welfare programs, community action agencies, employment agencies, and further educational opportunities. With this data plans were made to include articles of this nature which would be relevant to the students educational benefit with the idea of increasing the student's economic welfare. After checking with several of the public agencies that offer opportunities to low-income or disadvantaged adult education students, it is reported that the students' knowledge of these agencies was received from the Appalachia News.

4. To determine the feasibility of communicating readability levels of individual articles in a low-reading level newspaper on a continuing basis to ABE teachers.
Using a reading ease formula closely following the FOG Index developed by Robert Gunning each article was rated according to its reading level. A copy containing the reading level of each article within the newspaper along with the answer to the cross-word puzzle and other suggested teaching ideas using the paper was mailed to each teacher receiving multiple copies of the Appalachia News.

There was no written or prepared evaluation of this objective with the teachers. According to communications with the teachers, the readability scale of each article was used effectively in the classroom. The teachers reported that they would use the readability scale and mark on her copy of the paper the reading level of each article so that in assigning oral reading in class, a student would not be embarrassed by being called on in class to read an article that they could not read.

IV. COMPONENTS:

Outreach:

The Appalachia News has a great influence on adult education in Mississippi Appalachia as well as in the other states where it is being mailed. Presently 5,500 copies are being mailed to adult education students and other interested people in thirty-four states and the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia.

Other agencies concerned with adult education, i.e., Manpower Training Programs, TVA orientation programs, U.S. Department of Agriculture programs dealing with the underprivileged adult have expressed interest in this project inasmuch as they are included on the mailing list and articles are being received from these agencies to be included in the newspaper.

Retention:

Retention does not pertain to this program although it is felt the presence of the Appalachia News in the classroom might have an influence on the adult education student's desire to stay in the classroom.

Manpower:

Itawamba Junior College adult education department has the responsibility of administering this program. The staff includes the director of the Vocational Center, Larry Otis and Wylie Wood, supervisor of adult education, who are responsible for the administration of the project.

The newspaper staff includes an editor, Miss Donna Hobson, printer, Rayford Foster, and staff members, Miss Sue Anest who is responsible for art work, Bobby Davis, who is responsible for wrapping, routing, and mailing of the paper, photography, and the students included in the vocational printing class.

Materials:

Material for the Appalachia News comes from several agencies. The Tupelo office of the Social Security Administration, Mr. Hugh Tigrett, Director, writes a weekly column of questions and answers concerning Social Security problems. He encourages students to send questions which will be answered in the newspaper.

The Health Department supplies information for the health information column. This information is re-written by the editor on a lower reading level.

Wire copy and pictures from United Press International are donated by the Tupelo Daily Journal, local daily newspaper.

The United States Department of Agriculture through the Food and Nutrition Service provides news releases and pictorial recipes. The Extension Services, County Agent's office and Employment Service are other contributors.

Most important are the student's contributions to the Appalachia News. It is this information that tells the adult education story as it is best told by the words of students who participate in the program.

Methods:

A teacher's guide, as mentioned previously, is mailed to teachers with suggested ideas how the newspaper can best be used in the classroom.

The crossword puzzle is used with emphasis on spelling and word meaning.

Students read articles orally and they are taught to read for comprehension.

Health lessons develop for the health information column.

Personal grooming discussions in the class follow the reading of articles of this type in the Appalachia News.

Follow-up:

Follow-up does not pertain to this project.

Counseling:

The Health Information and Social Security News as well as statistical articles, such as accident rates, that appear from time to time, are used by counselors in the adult education program.

Students are shown the advantage of using resources that they have in the articles that tell them how to build items rather than buy them. For example, issues have contained pictorial directions for building shelves and closets which will conserve the student's monetary resources.

V. State Support:

The Appalachia News has received support throughout the state of Mississippi. Although only twenty counties of Mississippi are included in Appalachia, the entire state has requested copies of the newspaper for use in adult education program.

Other state agencies presently aiding the production of the paper is the Mississippi Vocational Department, inasmuch as they provide equipment for the actual printing of the paper.

The State Department of Adult Education provides funds for the salaries of administrators of the project. It is believed that after this demonstration project has proven itself, the State of Mississippi, Adult Education Department, will assume the funding and operation of this project.

VI. Recommendations:

The Appalachia News was widely received by agencies concerned with raising the standards of the under-educated adult.

Due to the limited size of the paper there was not enough space for a proper balance of articles for male and female readers. Therefore, the paper seemed to be female oriented. Coverage of all phases of current news was limited by size factor. A large amount of space had to be used for the crossword puzzle and answers which could be provided for in regular teacher's guide compiled by an adult education curriculum specialist, if one were available.

Due to the fact that the Appalachia News has a wide circulation area, local news has to be limited because of the decrease in interest of other students in the local news of this area.

It is recommended strongly that the Appalachia News be expanded to eight pages if not weekly, at least once or twice a month in order to include more information needed by the adult education students.

The addition of four pages could be designed around a core curriculum of materials for adult basic education. It could be retained and used individually or collectively for instructional purposes.

It should be measured in a cost analysis—the number of people served and the cost per publication.

A column or series of articles should be designed to provide self-testing or self-analysis with a comparison of required skills for different areas of work. An example would be a self-test in math for auto mechanics.

A study of the involvement of other agencies should be conducted. This would gauge what is succeeding in the News.

A safety column is planned for inclusion in the Appalachia News. Information for this column will be provided by the Mississippi State Highway Patrol.

Also planned is a series concerning various occupation so that students can be aware of the many jobs which await them.

More articles will illustrations are planned for the months ahead.

As far as content is concerned, a continuing effort will be made to hold the interest of both male and female readers. Comments from male students indicate that they are conveying household information to their wives.

We feel that these recommendations will make the Appalachia News even more successful by aiding the teachers with their lesson plans. Since we want the teachers to use the newspaper in their classrooms, we feel that if we give them a plan, they will more likely use the newspaper. Thus, the Appalachia News will reach the reader for whom it is intended.

Dear Mr. Otis:

The officer-in-charge of our Food and Nutrition Service field office in your city has told us, and we have seen samples, of your college's continued effective usage of nutrition education and food stamp program information in THE APPALACHIA NEWS.

The efforts put forth by Miss Donna Hobson and her editorial staff have contributed much toward the effectiveness of food programs within your circulation area. Indeed, the contributions made by your paper, in the public interest, have been invaluable.

In behalf of FNS Administrator Edward J. Hekman and the Food and Nutrition Service as a whole, I would like to take this opportunity to thank you and your college for your continued strong support of our programs.

THE APPALACHIA NEWS is performing a valuable public service, of which you may be justly proud.

Dear Miss Hobson:

We're adding your name to the mailing lists for our weekly news packets, which include "Food Review" and "Food and Nutrition News," at the request of Ralph Dean, officer-in-charge of the Food and Nutrition Service field office at Tupelo.

I'd like to add that we've been pleased with your use of our material, and especially the way you often rewrite it. In fact, we've had a request from our Washington Information Office for a copy of the issue in which you simplified our "How to Buy Canned and Frozen Vegetables" copy. Would you have an extra issue that carried the article you could send to me? It was about mid-April and the title of the article was "Mary wanted to buy vegetables."

While visiting the center last week, we discussed the possibility of receiving some copies of the Appalachian News to be used with low phase English students. I discussed this matter with the English teachers, and they thought that it would be an excellent educational aid. We could use as many as 200 copies if you could supply us with them.

Special News Is Right On Target

Northeast Miss. Bureau

TUPELO, Miss., Sept. 5. — For a man or woman just learning to read, using a conventional newspaper can present a difficult problem.

For instance, the Appalachia News, published in Tupelo, Miss., has had to attack the problem and come up with a solution. The Appalachia News is right on target.

The youthful editor, except for occasional help, doubles as the entire news staff. Her job is to translate national and local news into simple, short sentences, "ranging from the first and second to the eighth grade reading levels."

The students seem to really look forward to it," Miss Hobson said. "It's specially intended for them, and they can identify with it."

The Appalachia News may just be simple reading to the average person, but to a poorly educated adult in basic education classes, it is much more," Miss Hobson said. "It's an informative tool to practice newly acquired skills — something like an adult "Weekly Reader" with local news."

The youthful editor, except for occasional help, doubles as the entire news staff. Her job is to translate national and local news into simple, short sentences, "ranging from the first and second to the eighth grade reading levels."

She also prints helpful information, particularly for low-income persons, from the health department, the Agriculture Extension Service, and the Social Security office.

Special weekly features include simple crossword puzzles (created by Miss Hobson), pictorial recipes, and a large-type illustrated section for new readers.

"I thought this would be hard at first," she said, "but now it isn't difficult at all. I'm just afraid that I'll begin talking on the same level."

Larry Otis, director of the college's vo-tech center, realized the possibility of such a publication two years ago, and until February, sought ways to fund the undertaking.

Thank you for the copies of your excellent newspaper The Appalachia News. This paper would be most helpful to us in our efforts to encourage our trainees to continue their education through additional reading outside of the classroom.

You said in your letter of May 12, 1970, that it might be possible for us to be included on your mailing list for multiple copies of your paper after July 1, 1970. If this is possible, we would like to receive a minimum of 60 copies each week. If it is not possible for us to get this many copies, we would still like to receive as many as you can provide.

Please let us know if you will be able to add us to your mailing list for fiscal year 1971, and how many copies you will be able to send us each week.

Dear Miss Hobson,

I have greatly enjoyed reading your APPALACHIA NEWS. I am in charge of putting out a bi-monthly bulletin, THE SOUL CITY BULLETIN, for members of a Negro ghetto area in Tuscaloosa. The Soul City Project, conducted by the Department of Continuing Education in Home Economics, is a NEH-financed program designed to teach hard core illiterate inner-city women basic skills in Home Economics.

I have gotten some useful ideas and information from your publication. It has been helpful in giving me an idea of how to bring the language level down to one the people in Soul City can understand. Communication is one of the biggest barriers we are facing.

I am enclosing the first two issues of THE SOUL CITY BULLETIN for this year. You may be interested in seeing how we have used some of your information. Please send us a copy of your paper regularly. The addresses are below. It will be a great help to me.
