The FIGHTING TENDERFOOT

A Dramatic Story of The Old Frontier West
 by WILLIAM McLOED RAINES

Though a rising tide of emotion had swept this way for the time, she knew that his ways were not her ways. They were temperamental, at war, in spite of the fact that he adored and cherished her. Just now she was willing to hope, passionately eager to believe that love would fuse their spirits to harmony. It must be so, she told herself. HARRY saw her his above, smiling benignly. Surely he would at last see the real man. Smith-Berford caught sight of her as she rode forward, and came to meet her.

"It's been a thousand years since I saw you," he protested smiling up at the girl. "The day has turned a lot brighter. Won't you light?"
 "I want to see Mr. O'Hara."
 He helped her from the saddle and they moved together toward the house. Barbara waited on the porch while he went in to get his partner. When O'Hara joined her the girl led with him as though unconsciously, toward the hitch rack. It was like her to begin without leavious explanation.

"I've just left David Ingram. He's ready to make news on any reasonable terms," she said.
 The woman's steam streamed through her cheeks. "I sent him a note by that Mexican Garcia," she went on. "I asked him to meet me. We've talked it all over. He'll do whatever is right."
 "The name of Quantrell's attack?"
 "Yes. I can't go to Father yet. I'm not ready to explain everything. Will you meet Mr. Ingram and then take his message to Father?"

"Of course I will," she felt as though the bottom had dropped out of his heart. There was more to this than she had told him. In her soft and shimmer eyes was the light of a new dream come true.
 "We had a talk," she said almost in a murmur, dropping her long eyes.

Before she spoke again he made it plain that none of the emotion which had been in him would show in his eyes.
 "When will I meet him and what shall I do?" he asked.
 She gave him directions.

"I suppose they referred to what you said about his hands, his love for me and for another man. They'll want to know the terms. Between you and me, I don't know until the next week. Before they separated he had one last word to say to him and she held it with her hand on his coat sleeve.
 "I want peace more than anything else in the world, Garrett. You will do your best, won't you?"

His brown eyes rested on hers as he promised. "I'll do my best, Barbara. Perhaps the best way is a little assistance as he added, "I want you to save what you will more than anything else in the world."
 "Would you want me to have it if you thought it wasn't best for me?" she asked.

"No, but I wouldn't want to stand in the way of your having it."
 He thought many times later of that last remark of Barbara's. Had she some precedence in her mind of short-lived happiness, some intuition that her love craft was likely to be wrecked by stormy seas? In the light of subsequent events he came to think so.

The peace negotiations, now that Ingram had made up his mind to them, turned out to be absolutely simple. Confronted by this new situation, a foe willing to make concessions, W. Steelman made a mental right about face. He did not want to be outdone in generosity. There fore he met his foe at least halfway. Within four months of the date of the treaty, W. Steelman had to swallow a bitter pill. He stood up behind the child he adored and saw her married to David Ingram. One aspect of the matter troubled Barbara. She had thought it would be a great blow to his pride but she saw that it was his love that was hit. He grieved because he was sure that she would be unhappy in her marriage.

And before she had been David Ingram's wife for two weeks, Barbara knew he was right. She summed her pride and her courage to keep him and others from finding out.

CHAPTER TEN

It was agreed in a conference attended by the governor of the territory, the sheriff of the county, Ingram, Steelman and the United States marshal, that the state should be wiped clean of Jefferson offenses committed during the rebellion county war unless indictments had already been found against the law breakers. In the event that any of these were convicted the governor promised a pardon.

Bob Quantrell was no party to the agreement. He had refused to recognize the new conditions. He went on the sly and disappeared into the haphazard emerging from it on to get food and supplies or to raid some ranch and rustle stock. Three of his former associates, however, rallied around him, men who preferred to steal rather than work for a living. Deever was one of them. Fankey was another. The deprecation of the Quantrell gang, as the outlaws came to be called by common consent, were high-handed and efficient. They killed a clerk at the Indian agency, an innocent youth from the East who chanced to come on them as they were driving away a bunch of horses belonging to the government. They preyed particularly upon cattle bearing the Diamond Tail, Hashknife or the Circle S. O brands.

The outlaws were protected by their friends. Young Quantrell was popular among the Neosagos. Posses organized by Ingram and Steelman, primarily under the leadership of the sheriff, could not move against him without warning reaching the outlaw.

The relationship existing between Steelman and Ingram was a stiff and formal one, though in this matter of putting the cattle thieves out of business Steelman knew there must be cooperation.

He discussed the situation with Smith-Berford one day.
 "We're not getting" anywhere, I'm afraid," he said. "Nor we won't with this Jim What's his name sheriff. He's got no guts. He won't go out after Quantrell or sleep on his trail till he gets him. I had a talk with him yesterday. He's willin' to resign if we can find a good man to take his place. Well, I've found the good man. What would you think of our partner, Garrett O'Hara? What kind of a sheriff do you think he'd make?"

"He'd make a bully one. That's not the point, I'm thinking about Garrett and his safety. Dash it all, I'd rather go broke from that young scoundrel Quantrell's raids on our stock."
 "Some one has to stop this rustling. I'm too busy. My boy is too young. Ingram is the logical man, but he claims he hasn't time for it. Run your mind over the men you know in the neighborhood, then tell me who is best qualified for it."
 "But Garrett is no trailer. He doesn't know this country well," protested Smith-Berford.

IMPORTANT SUGGESTIONS FOR THE SEASON

Are your tobacco plants growing as they should? If not you should use nitrate of soda on them after they reach the size of a dime. Nitrate of soda may be used any time after the plants reach this size until they are large enough to transplant. Considerable care must be taken in applying nitrate of soda to young plants. If of any kind to avoid burning. If the nitrate of soda is carelessly used or too much is applied, the damage will be as follows: The plants will be killed. However, if used in the proper way, it will be of great benefit. One very serious mistake that is often made in using the rye crop for green manure is in letting the rye get too near maturity. Rye should be turned under when 12 to 18 inches tall. At this stage it is tender enough to rot quickly when turned under. If the rye is much taller than this it will be so dry and tough that it will take months for it to rot properly and also, by the time rye is heading out there is much less water in the soil than there is a few weeks earlier, which fact also makes for slower rot.

Usually it is not profitable to produce seed rye in Kentucky. The yield is low per acre and the seed grain are not often plump and well filled. Seed rye is usually not very expensive. When rye is matted, the straw is very stiff, therefore making very poor feed after being threshed.

TOBACCO FLEA BEETLE

Practically every year tobacco plants are seriously injured while they are quite small by the tobacco flea beetle. There is one cheap, sure and easy way to prevent this damage. Dissolve one pound of arsenate of lead in 26 gallons of water and sprinkle on the bed. Enough of the solution should be used to wet the plants thoroughly. One application should be enough but if this is washed away by a heavy rain shortly after being applied the bed should be re-treated and if the insects reappear the application should be repeated. Other poisons may be used but some of them burn seriously so should not be used. Arsenate of lead can be had. Arsenate of lead may be obtained at any drug store.

KOREAN CLOVER

Korean Clover proved itself last year to be the most drought resisting plant that can be grown in this section. It is one of the best pasture plants available and makes abundant yield of hay of excellent quality on any kind of land that will produce a fair crop of any kind. It does not have to be limed or fertilized in any way. Just sow the seed and expect a crop. However, Korean Clover like all other crop plants responds profitably to good treatment. Korean may be sown any time during the next month with excellent results. The price of seed has declined somewhat during the past few weeks. Seed costs about 35 cents a pound. Five to ten pounds sow into the acre make an excellent seed crop. Fifteen pound per acre should be sown to

MANAGING THE RYE CROP

There is a considerable acreage of rye in Rowan county this spring and many farmers are having their first experience with it. Rye is primarily a pasture crop and may be used for this purpose with great benefit. It serves well as a cover crop for protecting the soil during the winter months and as a green manure crop when turned under at the proper time. Pasturing should be done carefully. Do not over pasture, yet keep enough livestock on it to keep it from getting too high and tough. Don't pasture when the ground is wet because at such times the soil will be damaged by tramping of the stock.

One very serious mistake that is often made in using the rye crop for green manure is in letting the rye get too near maturity. Rye should be turned under when 12 to 18 inches tall. At this stage it is tender enough to rot quickly when turned under. If the rye is much taller than this it will be so dry and tough that it will take months for it to rot properly and also, by the time rye is heading out there is much less water in the soil than there is a few weeks earlier, which fact also makes for slower rot.

Usually it is not profitable to produce seed rye in Kentucky. The yield is low per acre and the seed grain are not often plump and well filled. Seed rye is usually not very expensive. When rye is matted, the straw is very stiff, therefore making very poor feed after being threshed.

RELIABILITY

Long, hard use shows the value of good materials and simplicity of design

EVERYWHERE you go you hear reports of the good performance and reliability of the Ford.

One owner writes—"The Ford Tudor Sedan I am driving has covered 59,300 miles through all kinds of weather. It is still giving perfect satisfaction."

Another owner describes a trip of 3217 miles in 95 hours over bad roads and through heavy rain and sleet in the mountains. "Throughout the entire trip," he writes, "the Ford performed excellently and no mechanical trouble of any kind was experienced. The shatter-proof glass undoubtedly saved us from serious injury when a prairie chicken struck the windshield while we were traveling at 65 miles an hour."

See the nearest dealer and have him give you a demonstration ride in the Ford. Then, from your own personal experience, you will know that it brings you everything you want or need in a motor car at an unusually low price.

be kept down. Many an idle hand can be put to work and help relieve the unemployed situation. Many lot owners have already had their lots cleaned up and given employment to those in need of it.

Mayor H. L. Wilson will state in his proclamation some of the advantages of the "CLEAN UP and PAINT UP CAMPAIGN". This proclamation is published again this week as a reminder of the work to be done. Read it. Especially the final statement: "Your Cooperation in Making Morehead a Clean and Beautiful City Will Be Appreciated by all Citizens."

CHRISTIAN CHURCH

The church with a royal welcome for everybody.

Sunday will be observed as Boys Day in the Bible School and Church. Fathers, suppose you come with your boy and if you do not have a boy, come or go to Bible School and church with the ~~de~~ other boys. What do you say?

"Is the Young Man Safe?" sermon theme 10:45, Music and fine fellowship. Christian Endeavor 6:30. Yes, the young people enjoy this service.

7:30 A Union service will be held at the Christian Church. This service will be in the form of a recognition service for the boys and the fathers. If you never did go with your son, to church, go with him Sunday.
