

State's Originator Of Night Schools For Aged Dies

Tryon, N. C., Dec. 3 (AP)—Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, 83, of Tryon, who started night schools in Kentucky to teach old people to read and write, died at a hospital here Tuesday after a long illness.

She was head of Kentucky's first illiteracy commission and formerly served as superintendent of schools in Rowan County in that state.

She had lived here the past 30 years and also had taught here.

Surviving is a brother, Glenn C. Stewart, Memphis, Tenn.

The funeral was here Wednesday.