The Town Marshal of Morehead, Ky., and Two Sons of Dr. H. S. Logan Shot Dead.

LEXINGTON, KY., June 8.—From information just received it seems that Marshal Mannin, of Morehead, with two other men, went about 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon to arrest William and John Logan, sons of Dr. H. S. Logan, confined in the jail at this place on the charge of conspiring to kill Taylor Young. The marshal had a warrant for their arrest, and when he reached the Logan homestead, he asked the housekeeper if the Logan boys were at home. She said they were not, which reply did not satisfy Mannin, and he went up the stairs to search for them. The Logans had seen the approach of the officers and secreted themselves on the second floor of the house. Just as the marshal reached the top of the stairs they opened fire on him, killing him instantly. The two men who came with Mannin then fired on the Logans, killing both of them instantly. The affair has caused great excitement, and further trouble may be expected soon. The Logan boys belonged to the Martin faction, and while Mannin took no part in the Tolliver-Martin feud, it is believed he is in full sympathy with Craig Tolliver, who is now police judge of the town of Morehead. Later advices from Morehead state that Marshal Mannin is not dead, but fatally wounded by buckshot. Craig Tolliver accompanied the posse to Logan's house.
