Through the influence of the Morehead Normal School, Rowan is an orderly and quiet county and Morehead is one of the best managed and most hospitable towns in the State. The school has been a potent factor in the reformation of the community. It has served to prevent the continuance or recurrence of any evil, for it has caused the schools to go. About four hundred teachers have been trained within its classrooms for their profession, and through these teachers the children of the community are being reached.

Morehead is a center of mountain life and enterprise. No town in Eastern Kentucky has a larger territory tributary to it. It is the distributing point for four or five counties and is in part for five other counties. It is the railroad center for a vast stretch of mountain territory. Not a week goes by without the appearance on its streets of many wagons that have come for sales to procure supplies. It is the only point of departure for many miles from the valley in which it is situated to the county on either side. It is located on a host of railroad, and two branch roads, and it is in course of construction.

It is admirably situated for a school, whose aim it is to teach a large number of poor mountain people. It is the gateway to Eastern Kentucky and West Virginia.

Through the influence of the Morehead Normal School, Rowan is an orderly and quiet county and Morehead is one of the best managed and most hospitable towns in the State. The school has been a potent factor in the reformation of the community. It has served to prevent the continuance or recurrence of any evil, for it has caused the schools to go. About four hundred teachers have been trained within its classrooms for their profession, and through these teachers the children of the community are being reached.

Morehead is a center of mountain life and enterprise. No town in Eastern Kentucky has a larger territory tributary to it. It is the distributing point for four or five counties and is in part for five other counties. It is the railroad center for a vast stretch of mountain territory. Not a week goes by without the appearance on its streets of many wagons that have come for sales to procure supplies. It is the only point of departure for many miles from the valley in which it is situated to the county on either side. It is located on a host of railroad, and two branch roads, and it is in course of construction.

It is admirably situated for a school, whose aim it is to teach a large number of poor mountain people. It is the gateway to Eastern Kentucky and West Virginia.

At the beginning of the school year, the west wing of the boys' dormitory was moved to the north wing of the old building. The boys were divided into four classes, and each class was given a room to itself. The new wing was furnished with beds, desks, and chairs, and was equipped with a water closet and a lavatory. The boys were very pleased with their new quarters, and they worked hard to keep them clean and in good order.

The school had a large number of students, and they were all very active in their studies. They were taught to read, write, and cipher, and they also studied history, geography, and natural science. The teachers were all very kind and patient, and they did their best to make the students happy.

The school was well equipped with books, and there were many libraries in the town. The students often visited these libraries to read books and to study. They were also allowed to borrow books from the school library, and they were encouraged to read as much as they could.

The school had a large number of students, and they were all very active in their studies. They were taught to read, write, and cipher, and they also studied history, geography, and natural science. The teachers were all very kind and patient, and they did their best to make the students happy.

The school had a large number of students, and they were all very active in their studies. They were taught to read, write, and cipher, and they also studied history, geography, and natural science. The teachers were all very kind and patient, and they did their best to make the students happy.

The school had a large number of students, and they were all very active in their studies. They were taught to read, write, and cipher, and they also studied history, geography, and natural science. The teachers were all very kind and patient, and they did their best to make the students happy.

The school had a large number of students, and they were all very active in their studies. They were taught to read, write, and cipher, and they also studied history, geography, and natural science. The teachers were all very kind and patient, and they did their best to make the students happy.

The school had a large number of students, and they were all very active in their studies. They were taught to read, write, and cipher, and they also studied history, geography, and natural science. The teachers were all very kind and patient, and they did their best to make the students happy.