The Progressive offers this as its March $5.00 cash prize puzzle. Each of these jumbled words will spell the name of one of the United States. The problem is to arrange each of the six groups of letters to spell each the name of a State. For a starter, the first one is KENTUCKY, and each of the other five spell the name of a State. No guess will spell the name of more than one State. Write your solution opposite the jumbled letters and mail to address below. All answers must be accompanied by 10c. for postage on this paper for 4 weeks. Much interest was taken in our February prize puzzle which closed noon, Feb. 28, and checks were mailed the winners the next day. It will be equally divided as was the case in the February prize. This is instructive to children and parents can well afford to give the child the 10c. and help them to solve the problem. Answers must be in by 12 o'clock the last day of March. An extra prize will be given the first answer received whether correct or not.

be fired after she's seen you. With a swift rap on the side his forehead into his neighbor's ears, Mrs. Wilfred Methuen disappeared into the next room.

Stelio, springing to his feet in a rapt dunch, considered whether he slept or woke. But all no dream was this, but an exquisite thrilling reality to behold Margie pale and sad coming into the room. He held her hand to him in shy greeting then sitting at a little distance from him, talk soberly of her sorrow, her gratitude for his sympathy, her wonderment when Aunt Katrina had told her he had found them out at the Arlington. All the joy of the world was being tinged with grief, and he watched and listened to her. But he said no word of his love, and she seemed relieved that this was so.

Stelio, too, was content he had no wish to startle her now by the renewal of his vows of love. If he once began though the poor fellow, he could never stop it in this world, and he would not prove unworthy of Aunt Katrina's trust in him. So their talk by and by, glided into the old congenial symmetry of their former days, with the early days of their acquaintance on Lake Como. After she had told him what was needful of the circumstances of her father's death and the discovery of certain complications in business with McPhillip dating back many years, which had made it impossible for her to be able to fulfill a pledge made under child impressions to Mr. McPhillip, by mutual consent the two abandoned the painful subject, and went back to this region of their first enjoyment of each other.

"And that grim old Giuseppe of your father and Auntina, who looked as if she would jump at the neck of one of her gold hangers, said Margie after a prolonged review of her visit to 'Tar Niente.' Were they really relieved when the one poor American vanished out of the neighborhood?"

"Good old souls, it is always through excess of emotion that they show at their worst. When they know you—if she, know you better, they will fawn upon you, and must do so. Auntina, she raised me I got for the Biberon has raised me in their estimation to the plane of a millionaire, and they strut and preen accordingly. Even Giuseppe has condescended my being 'rich.'"

"The Biberon! Don't speak of that," cried she, her eyes grown misty. "If you know how your sacrifice has haunted me!"

"Pray don't distress yourself. It would have had to go some day. Why I heard tonight that your father's passing pang that the present owner is already talking of selling it again."

"Ah! if you might only have it back!"

"I fear that's not to be thought of. I have already experienced too much comfort from the privileges it

Heart Disease Almost Fatal to Young Girl

"My daughter, when thirteen years of age, was stricken with heart trouble, and she was so bad we had to place her bed near a window so the cold air could get her breath. One doctor said, 'poor child, she is likely to fall dead any time.' A friend who I heard told me that Miss Heart Remedy had cured my daughter, so I tried it, and she began to improve. She took a great many bottles, and I was glad to get a fat, rosy child. No one can imagine the relief of her heart and shoulders. I had to put the heart and shoulder bibles, palpitation, weak and hinders spells, you should begin using Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy at once. Profit by the experience of others while you may."

UPS AND DOWNS OF KLONDIKE JIM.

I am a diamond in the rough, anything at all, and will give a brief history of myself from the time I crossed the line of accountability—from the age of 8 years to 55, and many happenings through life's memory journey thus far, and try to be the all-seeing eye to take care of me on the other side of the great divide; and will pose as somewhat of a humorist, second to none, not even Mark Twain, James Whitcomb Riley, Bill Wye, Peck's Bad Boy or the Slow Train Thru Arkansas. I aim to lay the whole burch on the top shelf and take the belt of honor myself.

Now this shall be the history and life of Klondike Jim, and of the many adventures of the BROG. I would just say, get you a back number of Sears & Roebuck's catalog and save these articles from time to time and you will have it in scrap book form, and should I fade by the wayside you will still after wards think me dead. I will say here, in the interest of the Editor, that I wrote one of the first articles in the OLIVE HILL TIMES, when it was started in 1905, under the caption "Ups and Downs of Klondike Underwood." Well you should remember that the then Editor (who is yet at the helm) was the youngest Editor in the State that owned and controlled his own press and paper.

Well, I will tell you all how I come to be writing to the TIMES again. I formerly paid the Editor to publish my articles, but it has changed now. I got in debt to him and every time I wrote to town he would chase me up and down the streets, and I even would take short cuts thru the alleys. At last I got tired and told him I would lambast the stuff out of him if he didn't let me alone. That vexed the Editor from Genesis to Revelations anyway, and if he would make "Buncy" Wilhoit, Quincy Adams and Mont Williams and the rest of the gang let me alone when I come to town, he would have Bill Fields let me a postoffice at the forks of the road somewhere, I would pick up my pen and commence to write again. So I will rehearse a few of the many incidents of the past, such as George Egan, and his fearless mule, my Jack Stamper Prince; Elick Smith, and a thousand and one she splitting jokes; such as "Uncle Josh's Trunk Full of Fun," and so forth. I will write as the impromptu poet directs. My theme will be dog ticks, sheep ticks, politics and religion, and now and then a pretty woman. An old lady sitting in the corner smoking her pipe of clay, said she loved to read the newspaper and she thought it was so much like me.

[Now, friends, you know that P. T. Barnum almost starved to death on a farm in New Hampshire raising geese and afterward went into the show business, and said the American people loved to be humbugged. Now this book is going to be like a lady's cake; at first it don't seem to be any good but when the frosting is put on, it looks good and is appetizing.

So friends I will sandpaper, varnish and fresco it all in the end. Of course I will have to mix a little spice along, and occasionally hand you all a lemon or a ham sandwich.

I will close this week by saying that my photograph and tye or looked fine in your recent issue.

You will all probably want to know where I live. I live in the mountains of old Kentucky; out on Buffalo, where the sun goes round by the potatoe patch to shine on my farm. If you should pass through this nick o' woods and don't know where I live, you need make no inquiry; when you come to a house where folks stand in the road and throw rocks down the chimney, as that is where I live.

Next week I will let my mind wander back to my school days at 7 and 8 years, when I would go to Sunday school and would be given a Sunday School book telling all about the Esquimo and their wild customs. But little did I think that in after years I would be permitted to see them in the great Northland, and at the same time I heard a preacher pounding red hot perdition which scared me into jenny fits from one to five hundred.

Muses Mills, Ky.

Muses Mills, Ky., March 21—This community is in mourning over the sad and sorrowful work of the death angel that recently visited the home of our esteemed citizen and neighbor, Squire J. H. Muse, of this place, and in one day's time plucked from his home little Irene, his 2-year-old daughter, a jewel of his home, after only a few days sick-ness with whooping cough. And while the family was almost overcome with grief over the death of child, Maggie, his beloved wife and companion, whom had only been stricken down three days, we think with sorrow and grief, departed this life last Thursday morning and her soul freed from this body took its flight to the realms of eternal glory, there to join with Irene and a little son Omas Lee, who had crossed over the river some time before.

Maggie was a dear companion and mother and was well respected by all who knew her, and will be sadly missed, not only by her husband and children, but by her neighbors and other relatives as well.

Just before she departed this life she said that she had reached the light of God's love and her soul rejoiced in Him; leaving the blessed assurance that all was well with her.

Maggie, who was only about 32 years of age, leaves five children, the eldest but 13 years of age while the youngest is but 7 weeks old, besides a husband, father, mother, three sisters and a brother to mourn her loss.

While our heart goes out to the sorrowing relatives we can't help but say not to grieve for Maggie as for one for whom we had no hope, but for each to so live that you will meet her in the future where God and his angels dwell and where no more tears shall fall, and partings are unknown.

Dear Maggie has crossed the river; She has walked the lonely road; And while her body is sleeping in the dust, Her soul is at rest with God. She is dwelling with the angels, And singing the songs they sing, Aid with her dear sweet children, Their Savior's praises ring.

To her companion and dear children We say, don't weep for her, But live as Jesus asks you, And you will meet her there.

LABOR CLASS GAINS

England's Middle-Class Feel Advance of Former.

Paper Declares That the Lot of Professional With Moderate Income Is Far Worse Than That of the Average Working Man.

London.—A good deal of attention is being paid to the true meaning and effect of the almost continual labor upheavals that have affected this country in the last few years.

The Daily Express finds ground for hope of peace in the circumstance, or alleged circumstance, that, as a result of the recent strikes, many of the labor organizations are virtually bankrupt.

The Globe, pointing out another feature of the situation that has not escaped the notice of any thoughtful English article headed "Middle Class Burdens." It is, it says, "easy to wax sentimental over the woes of the so-called working classes."

Britishly, however, says the Globe, the state can not continue to provide free education, old age pensions and expensive insurance.

TWO hats, each in the moderate size which this season demands of stylish millinery, are contrasted here.

The shape is plain, but not at all stiff. The crown is rather some drab brim, some a little at each side, and lifts at the front, reminding one of a poke shape.

The upper and under brim and the top crown are covered with velvet put on plain. A puff of velvet shirred on a fine wire covers the side crown.

SILK DRESS FOR TEN DOLLARS IS EASILY POSSIBLE

TO make a dress as good looking as that pictured in the illustration is an achievement to be proud of. It could not be accomplished except that so little silk is required for the present fashions in skirts.

The shawl is made from silk, which is left when the skirt is cut. In shaping it to fit the hips, sufficient silk is cut away from the width of the goods to make it.

Black silk, made up with emerald green, or cerise or coral or white or in combination with some of the odder metallic colors, makes the most satisfactory development of this model.

with one dollar for the lace veil used in draping, there remain two dollars to cover the cost of a half yard of ribbon, three small pins, and a half yard of silk for the plating.

The waist is made separately, and put on with an attached waist, the skirt, except for three plies laid in the front border, to the left side seam. It is sewed to a low-necked muslin waist; a plain, tight, corset cover will give a suitable waist to which to attach it.

OLD CITY OF BRUGES

Ancient Capital of Flanders Quint and Peaceful.

Little Belgium Town Has Not Yet Been Ruined by the Annual Stampede of Tourists, Although They Go There.

Paris.—Only a couple of hours from the busy town of Brussels, a half day from Paris, and less than twenty for those of the metropolis of the world one finds a town that still retains the flavor of the Middle Ages.

From The Hague we passed through a country brilliant in its spring greenness, past the old Flemish villages and windmills slowly waving their great arms at the speeding train.

No sooner had we left the railroad station and started walking up the queer little street with its low gabled buildings than the quiet of the old town had settled on us.

A turn in the street brought us into the Grand Place, on one side of which is the famous belfry over the city hall.

For the belfry is the one great pride and show place of the town. No stranger can be in the town a half day without being conducted to the Grand Place, and having it pointed out to him and its history poured into his ears.

The affection with which the town regards this belfry is best revealed, perhaps, in the words of one of the city's poets.
