

HIRAM PIGMAN and Alf Perry, indicted at Morehead for killing Craig Tolliver and others, were arrested at Huntington, W. Va., Saturday, by Sheriff Hogg and Deputy Sheriff White of Rowan County. The prisoners agreed to accompany the officers home peacefully. All went well until the train crossed over the Big Sandy River at Catlettsburg. When the train was slowing up Pigman and Perry made a break for liberty, jumped from the train and started to run. The officers also alighted and started in hot pursuit. Being overtaken, the prisoners endeavored to get their revolvers from their grip-sacks but the officers covered them with their guns, and, chagrined as they were, they surrendered and were marched to Catlettsburg and placed under a strong guard. Sheriff Hogg was afraid to proceed further, as it was said the prisoners would be rescued between Olive Hill and Morehead by their friends. The Sheriff telegraphed Judge Cole for a military escort, and the Judge responded by telegraphing him to hold the prisoners at Catlettsburg until the escort arrived.

The party returned to Morehead yesterday, where Pigman and Perry will be held to answer the charge against them.
