Special to The Herald-Leader

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University opens its doors Monday, Aug. 23, to an expected fall semester enrollment of more than 6,000 persons.

Classes begin Thursday, Aug. 26. Homecoming Weekend is Oct. 8-9 and the Thanksgiving holiday is Nov. 24 to Nov. 29. Final examinations are scheduled Dec. 13-17 and the semester closes Saturday, Dec. 18.

The spring semester starts Monday, Jan. 10, with classes convening Thursday, Jan. 13. Spring vacation is set for March 11-20. Finals are May 8-12 and the semester ends Saturday, May 13. Commencement ceremonies are scheduled Sunday, May 14.

MSU students will find three major changes in campus life when they return. The university's Army ROTC program has become voluntary, women's residence hall hours have been liberalized and a limited "pass-fail" grading system has been initiated.

The ROTC program, mandatory for freshmen males until this fall, was changed after intensive study by a faculty-student committee. Beginning freshmen will be offered a nine-week introductory course as a preview of the full ROTC curriculum.

(MORE)

The new hours policy, also recommended by a study committee, allows any coed who is at least 21, or married or a senior or a graduate student, to determine her own dormitory schedule.

Junior and sophomore women must have parental permission if they are not 21 or married. All freshman coeds are subject to a midnight curfew Sunday through Tuesday and a 2 a.m. deadline on Friday and Saturday.

The "pass-fail" system permits students to enroll in elective courses without requiring them to compete for a letter grade. The plan may be used for up to 15 semester hours of non-required course work. It is designed to encourage more of a liberal arts approach by students pursuing specific degrees.

Other summer developments at MSU include the formation of a sixth academic school - Business and Economics. The school incorporates the departments of economics, accounting, business education and business administration. Dr. Thomas C. Morrison, chairman of economics, has been appointed acting dean.

As the result of a student referendum last spring, the semester special events fee has been increased from $5 to $10 effective this fall. The MSU Student Association tentatively has booked concerts by Blood Rock, the Bee Gees, Bill Cosby and The Fifth Dimension, all for the fall term. The fee provides admission for full-time students to all campus activities, including movies, plays, concerts and special lectures.

No new physical facilities have been added since the spring semester but construction is moving steadily on the $3.5 million Appalachian Technical Institute, a five-story classroom, office and parking structure.

Also starting this fall is MSU's new associate (two-year) degree in nursing. The first class of 20 already has been admitted.

The 1971-72 academic calendar includes:

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- The Morehead State University coed put on the headset, dialed a number and began taking notes.

She was listening to a tape recording, thus making her one of the first students to use the dial access information retrieval system recently installed at MSU's Combs Building.

The system provides audio programs to 79 student stations in three other classrooms in the building. All 79 students can listen to different programs or to the same tape.

The programs are recorded in both stereo and monaural sound. The stereo tapes are used for music courses.

A language laboratory is equipped with an additional 20 stations, equipped with microphones so the students can hear themselves. Entire classes can hear programs through amplifiers in the business-education classrooms.

"The new system is designed to strengthen, supplement and enrich the university's instructional program," said Dr. Jack Ellis, director of libraries. "It permits each student to advance at his own pace as he masters specific learning skills."

Dr. Ellis cited shorthand classes as an example of the system's versatility for individual use. Secretarial students can select the program for their specific assignment and advance as fast as their ability permits, he said.

MOREHEAD, Ky.---Students want better teaching, parents desire secure campuses and the public is demanding more goods and services for tax money spent on all levels of education, Morehead State University President Adron Doran told the MSU faculty last Saturday.

Addressing more than 1,000 persons at the annual faculty-staff luncheon, Dr. Doran said Kentucky's universities and colleges are moving away from the problems of student dissent into the "crucial" area of reassuring their objectives, roles and direction.

"One of the most critical issues which the General Assembly must face in this decade is how higher education will be organized and coordinated and where the educational centers of gravity will be established," he said.

Dr. Doran, entering his 18th year as MSU President, said university employees should not expect higher salaries and additional facilities until the system demonstrates greater efficiency and more concern for developing each student's full potential.

He predicted faculty members will have heavier teaching loads and larger classes as operating costs continue to climb.

MSU Registration 2222222

The ROTC program mandatory for freshman males until this fall, was changed after intensive study by a faculty-student committee. Beginning freshmen will be offered a nine-week introductory course as a preview of the full ROTC program.

Also recommended by a study committee, the new hours policy allows qualified coeds to live in residence halls with self-regulated hours and to determine their own hours.

Junior and sophomore women who are not 21 or married must have parental permission to live in residence halls with self-regulated hours. All freshman coeds are subject to a midnight curfew Sunday through Thursday and a 2 a.m. deadline on Friday and Saturday.

The "pass-fail" system permits students to enroll in elective courses without requiring them to compete for a letter grade. The plan may be used for up to 15 semester hours of non-required course work. It is designed to encourage a liberal arts approach by students pursuing certain degrees.

A sixth academic school, Business and Economics, has also been formed. The school incorporates the departments of economics, accounting, business education and business administration. Dr. T. C. Morrison, chairman of economics, is the acting dean.

Another new program beginning this fall is MSU's new two-year nursing program. The first class will begin work on the associate degree in nursing this month.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Network television needs a revival of the "provocative" journalistic style of Edward R. Murrow, Robert Goralski of NBC News said recently at Morehead State University.

The Washington correspondent said such "probing" documentaries and newscasts are more necessary today because television has become the country's prime source of national and international news.

"Television news has to do a better job of informing the public and analyzing the news if we are to avoid Vietnam-type mistakes in the future," the Pentagon newsman said.

Goralski, a 10-year veteran of network news, voiced concern over government reaction to the controversial "Selling of the Pentagon" documentary. He called it "a good piece of television journalism" but warned its critics on Capitol Hill want to restrict press freedom in the pre-publication and pre-broadcast phase.

Goralski was the first speaker in MSU's 1971-72 Concert and Lecture Series.

Each of the seats is marked with a plaque saluting Mrs. Doran and the more than 250 member clubs of the KFWC who helped raise the money.

"This certainly is a gratifying occasion for all of the club women in Kentucky who worked so diligently to demonstrate their deep interest in cultural activities," Mrs. Doran said recently.

A spokesman at the $70 million Center said the KFWC was the only such organization in the country to finance more than one seat in any of the building's three main auditoriums.

MOREHEAD, Ky.---"Education is cheaper by the half dozen in our case," said Edwin Benton, Caney graduate student at Morehead State University.

Asscience and mathematics teacher at Morgan County High School, Benton is working toward his Rank I classification by attending night classes. He received his A.B. degree in 1964 and his M.A. degree in 1969 from MSU.

Mrs. Benton, who works with the Kentucky Child Welfare Research Foundation in Morgan County, is taking courses to enrich her background in social work. She hopes to receive a degree in social work.

Oldest daughter Joyce, an August graduate of MSU, is working toward certification as an elementary teacher. She had previously qualified for a secondary teaching certificate.

Lois, who is married to Raymond Lumpkins of West Liberty, and oldest son Philip are both elementary-education majors. Lois is a senior, and Phil is a junior. Second son Joe is a sophomore majoring in political science.

Benton said that transportation to classes has not been a problem for the two-car family. Joe and Phil share one car on campus, while Mr. and Mrs. Benton and Joyce use the other car to commute.

"Although my wife and I have classes on different nights, we have always arranged to have a ride on class night," Benton said. "We once had three teenagers with drivers' licenses at home, which made things sort of hectic."

A firm believer in higher education, Benton is pleased that six members of his immediate family are in school. "We didn't plan it this way 22 years ago when Joyce was born, but we certainly are glad our children chose to continue their educations."

"Going to college seemed natural for me since my parents and older sisters attended MSU," Phil said. "We just had good examples to follow."

Miss Kitchen, who was a cheerleader four years and captain her senior year at Boyd County High School, spent about three hours each morning and four each evening teaching mass cheers, gymnastics, pom-pom classes and yells.

She taught group sessions, sometimes as many as 150 students in the mornings, and individualized instruction at night. She remembers one group of 150 students composed of all girls except one male. "He was very shy at first, but different instructors worked with him until he was one of the better students at the close of camp," she said.

A physical education major, Miss Kitchen was selected as one of 40 cheerleading instructors from more than 10,000 applicants.

Her first contact with the National Cheerleader Association was in the summer of 1969 when she attended Camp Crescendo at Lebanon Junction. She won the title "Miss Camp Crescendo."

The camp director asked her to apply to become an instructor as soon as she graduated from high school. She applied and was one of two Kentuckians selected. She plans to instruct again next summer.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Every Morehead State University Theater production has a cast which is seldom in the limelight but without them the show would not go on.

They are the behind-the-scenes workers who provide props, scenery, lighting and publicity for the plays.

More than 80 students and staff members are busily preparing for the Oct. 1 opening of Shakespeare's "The Tempest," the first of five major productions to be presented this year.

A set construction crew headed by student foreman Greg Bell, Louisville sophomore, is in charge of transferring designer's ideas from drawings to scenery flats. The crew paints the flats, places them on stage and builds platforms and large units of three-dimensional scenery.

The sets for "The Tempest" were designed by Lance Brockman, instructor of dramatic art, in coordination with the director, Dr. William Layne. Design work for the sets, consisting largely of a system of drops and platforms, started in early August.

A prop committee is collecting furniture and hand props such as books, swords and masks. Refinishing and upholstering furniture are other duties.

Making flat patterns from the designer's sketches and fitting them to the cast are tasks of the costume committee. The seamstresses start with bolts of material and sew, fit, hem and trim until the costumes are complete, including shoes, purses, hats and belts.

Costumes for "The Tempest" are heavily endowed with details dominant in the Gothic period. One or more costumes for each actor in the 25-member "Tempest" cast were made from various cloth materials, leather and animal pelts.

The publicity committee, headed by Mona Main, Jeffersontown sophomore, is responsible for informing the public of theater activities through various news releases. Other duties include designing programs, selling tickets and arranging promotional displays.

Various other workers are necessary to man the lights, read scripts, help apply makeup and perform a variety of odd jobs. When all the backstage performances are blended together smoothly, the production is a technical success.

"The Tempest" will open a two-day run Friday, Oct. 1, at 8:15 p.m. in Button Auditorium. A pre-performance tour conducted by the actors begins at 7:45 p.m.

Season tickets for five productions are $6, a savings of $2.50. More information can be obtained by writing Morehead State University Theater, Box 740, MSU, Morehead, Ky. 40351. The telephone is 606-783-2134.

MOREHEAD, Ky.---How can we learn to secure our nation? How would a revised draft law affect college students? How does the military-industrial complex function? Is there a serious threat to world peace?

These and other questions are being answered in a new course being offered this semester at Morehead State University.

The nine-week elective course, National Security 100, is designed to acquaint students with problems of national security and individual responsibilities regarding military service.

Following last spring's decision by the MSU Board of Regents to remove compulsory ROTC from the military-science program, a university ROTC Study Committee devised the national security course.

The committee proposed the course as a means of informing incoming freshmen of their obligations and options regarding military service.

MSU is the first university in the nation to offer such a course, according to Col. Arthur L. Kelly, professor of military science.

Dr. Paul Ford Davis, vice-president for academic affairs, Dr. Morris K. Caudill, dean of undergraduate programs, and Col. Kelly are members of a coordinating steering committee which serves as the policy-making council for the program. The steering committee reports to the ROTC Study Committee.

The course is administered by a committee headed by Dr. John Kleber, associate professor of history, and Maj. Billy Williams, associate professor of military science. This committee assures that the approach of the program is two-pronged---military and civilian.

Topics include conscription, the Selective Service System, moral decisions and war, history of security, the military-industrial complex and threats to world peace.

Lecturers come from off-campus and from the MSU School of Social Sciences and the Department of Military Science. Among off-campus speakers are Dr. Martin Scharlemann, St. Louis theologian, Air Force Col. Taylor Davidson, director of Kentucky's Selective Service System, and retired Gen. Harold K. Johnson, former Army chief of staff.

There are no uniform or hair style requirements for the course, and students receive one semester hour of credit. Seven girls are included in the 171-member class which meets in Baird Music Hall.

Upon completion of the introductory course, male students may elect to continue in the Army ROTC program by enrolling in the beginning military science class. Those who do not continue, receive one hour of credit.

Student attitudes will be polled at the start and conclusion of the course. A marked change is anticipated, Col. Kelly said.

"The national security course offers each entering freshman an opportunity to gain adequate information concerning various aspects of the problems inherent to our nation's security," Dean Caudill said. "These run the gamut from decisions regarding whether to employ a system of security to the role of the individual in maintaining that security system."

"Of more importance to the individual male freshman," he continued, "the course provides the opportunity for each person to find answers concerning his obligations in helping to maintain that security system."

LIVONIA, Mich. --- Morehead State University President Adron Doran helped inaugurate Dr. C. Nelson Grote as the second president of Schoolcraft College here Saturday and identified him as "the kind of complex man required in this 20th century to manage a very complex enterprise that we call a college."

Dr. Doran said in his main inaugural address that Dr. Grote, former dean of MSU's School of Applied Sciences and Technology, has the professional preparation, experience and courage to assume the "awesome task" of a college presidency.

Dr. Doran, now in his 18th year as president of Morehead State, reviewed five "critical" issues facing American colleges and universities:

1 - Establishment of a true partnership among local, state and federal governments in the organization, administration, coordination and financing of higher education.

2 - Agreement among the various facets of the academic community on the premise that the freedom to teach carries the responsibility to teach.

4 - Elimination of lawless elements bent on destroying the security of campuses and hampering students who seek to live and learn in a peaceful, comfortable and safe environment.

5 - Preparation of communities for growing college populations, pressures of rising costs and changing demands in academic programs.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- The military should stay out of the international limelight when force is not needed, a former Army chief of staff said recently at Morehead State University.

Retired Gen. Harold K. Johnson, now president of the Freedoms Foundation, addressed more than 1,000 students and faculty as part of the university's new voluntary course in national security.

Democratic governments cannot exist without military forces to maintain order and a stable climate for civilian law, the former four-star general said.

"The purpose of military forces is to be a constructive element in our society," said Johnson, who served from 1964 until 1968 in the Army's highest military post.

The 35-year Army veteran said that the best control in a government is the least amount of control. He also discussed the effects of advanced technology on today's international politics and the threat of Communism on the world's security.

In a question and answer session, Johnson said he does not favor student deferments and does not think an all-volunteer army is feasible.

An armed force of 2.5 million is needed to provide an adequate defense of the United States, he said, and this force cannot be raised through volunteers without lowering the standards.

He is among 18 military and civilian guest lecturers in the class.

Dora Deloris Ball, 20, of Lexington, a junior at Morehead State University, died early Friday of injuries suffered in a fall from a residence hall on the MSU campus.

Roger L. Wilson, MSU's vice president for student affairs, said the coed died at 1:20 a.m., about 30 minutes after arriving at the UK Medical Center in Lexington. She earlier underwent emergency treatment at St. Claire Medical Center in Morehead. Death was attributed to multiple injuries.

Miss Ball was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Ball, 872 Apache Trail, Lexington, and had transferred to MSU this fall from Midway Junior College.

Wilson said the young woman was found about 10:45 p.m. Thursday on the roof of the lobby of Nunn Hall, a 10-story women's residence hall. She reportedly arrived at the building about 15 minutes earlier for the announced purpose of visiting a friend.

Four residents on the third floor told of seeing an object drop past a window but there apparently were no eyewitnesses to the fall, Wilson added.

Miss Hall lived in Mignon Hall, a block from the scene of the tragedy. She was majoring in elementary education.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- A partner in a New York art gallery visited Morehead State University recently in preparation for an upcoming exhibit of Frank Duveneck works.

George Chapellier, a partner in the Chapellier Galleries, was collecting resource material from Dr. Bill Booth, head of MSU's art department. Booth, who wrote his doctoral dissertation on the Kentucky born artist, is considered an authority on Duveneck.

The retrospective exhibit of Duveneck's works will open in mid-February. About 70 examples of Duveneck's realistic art will be displayed for three weeks.

Information provided by Dr. Booth will be included in a 100-page booklet describing the exhibit. Dr. Booth has been invited to attend the opening of the exhibit.

Chapellier, whose gallery specializes in American art with emphasis on the late 19th century, said Duveneck's period is receiving a renewed interest.

Duveneck, a native of Covington, was a principal figure in transmitting the European tradition of realism to the United States. The Duveneck Memorial Gallery in Covington is named in his honor.

MOREHEAD, Ky.---Morehead State University boasts a team with a winning percentage of 80 per cent and the collection of about 140 trophies in the past seven years.

Although their current season is still young, the MSU debaters have already won first and second places in the MSU Eaglette Novice Debate Tournament, finished third in another novice tournament, and captured top honors in both varsity and novice competition at the Manchester College Invitational Debate Tournament.

Juniors Kathy Crusie of Lyndon, Ohio, and Ron Mather of Hodgenville took trophies in varsity competition and were named the top varsity debaters. Both have debated since high school.

"We practice almost every afternoon and evening the week before a tournament and two or three times a week when we don't have a tournament," Miss Crusie said.

She estimated that each debater spends at least five hours actually debating and a minimum of 12 hours research each week.

To what does the team owe its success? "Motivation, inspiration and perspiration sum it up," said Dan Egbers, Fort Thomas senior and another trophy winner.

"Her whole life is dedicated to debate," Mather said.

"Mrs. Webb sacrifices her time and money to help make our team a success. We feel we are really letting her down when we lose."

Fred Schmidt, Fern Creek freshman, said he heard when he came to MSU that losing members of the team had to polish trophies. He has yet to touch the polish rag because of his selection as the outstanding novice debater in two of three tournaments.

Schmidt, an outstanding high school debater, and former high school champion Pam Todd of Madisonville are the latest outstanding recruits.

Mrs. Webb said that most members of her team were outstanding debaters in high school. "We try to find the best high school debaters, and interest them in joining us," she said.

Schmidt, Egbers and Miss Crusie first became interested in MSU while attending the university's summer Communications Institute. "The institute provides great experience and gives high school debaters a head start for college debating," Kathy said. "MSU has built a great reputation which attracts other debaters, and we plan to uphold this reputation," she said.

The keeper of the trophy case is getting ready for more hardware. MSU hosts an invitational tournament Dec. 3 and 4.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- A lot of changes have taken place at the little green house on the corner of 2nd Street and Tippet Avenue.

The Appalachian Adult Learning Center at Morehead State University has a new director, new paneling, expanded hours of operations and lots of new students.

Open to everyone over 16, the center offers free services designed specifically for adults who want to improve basic educational skills such as reading and mathematics.

The heart of the learning center is a scientifically-developed system called programmed learning. This "do it yourself" educational process allows students to work at their individual levels at their own speeds.

Programmed learning uses textbooks, filmstrips, records and tapes to present subject matter which has been carefully organized into logical sequences for easy comprehension.

If a student runs into difficulty with a lesson, the learning lab coordinator may be called on for help. A teacher aide also will be available soon for additional aid.

"According to statistics gathered in learning labs in Ohio, North Carolina, and New York, the learning rate was shown to be twice as fast in learning labs than in conventional classrooms," says Brenda Fulkerson, center director.

Although planned with the basic education student in mind, the center has material up to the college level. No high school or college credit is directly available through the lab, but student can use center facilities in preparation for the general equivalency diploma (GED).

Another unique feature of the lab is its informal attendance policies. "There are no regular hours for anyone enrolled," Miss Fulkerson said. "The students are free to come and go as their schedule allows between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. Monday through Friday. This flexible attendance policy suits the needs of working people, women with children and others who cannot meet classes on regular basis."

The center, a project of MSU's Appalachian Adult Education Center, can accommodate 50 to 60 students, and husbands and wives are encouraged to attend the center together.

A Rowan County girl recently was the first person to receive the GED through preparation at the center. She was so impressed by her learning experience at the center that she plans to enroll in an advanced art program, possibly at MSU.

Every student is tested to determine abilities and goals. "The most important factor is that students realize we are here to help them reach individual goals," Miss Fulkerson said.

Using a unique combination of photography and painting, Young has produced a limited edition of prints entitled "Nebulous Nudes." The first edition includes 20 signed and numbered prints in six different colors and 80 signed prints of each color.

The first edition consists of two plates each presented in red, orange, gold, avocado, blue and white. These two plates are the first in a series of six paintings to be produced.

"There is nothing in life more interesting or beautiful than a human being," Young said, "Yet so much of the art I have seen in the past few years seems to be bent on destroying this beauty."

"It portrays the figure in a manner which seems designed to shock or disgust the viewer," he continued. "I certainly do not intend to be Victorian, but I have attempted to present the human figure in a style which shows its grace and beauty by producing compositions of shape and contour. "The human being is God's greatest work of art," Young added.

A native Kentuckian, Young is the son of the late Tom Young of Morehead, also a Kentucky artist. He received his bachelor's and master's degrees from MSU and joined the MSU art faculty in 1967.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- The pace set by Clinton and Doris Gilbert, Boyd County juniors at Morehead State University, gets a bit hectic at times.

"My wife has been taking classes on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, and I go the other days," Gilbert said. The parent who is going to school on a particular day prepares breakfast for their 12-year-old son, Artie, and seven-year-old daughter, LaDona.

Since the Gilberts' means of transportation is a pick-up truck, they ride to MSU with friends and use the truck for delivering newspapers.

"Sometimes there seems not to be enough time to get things done," said Gilbert, who is also pastor of the Melrose Methodist Church in Greenup County.

Two years ago the couple, in their early thirties, took equivalency tests for their high school diplomas. After receiving these, Clinton decided to go to college if his wife would go too.

They entered Ashland Community College in the fall of 1969. For the first two semesters, they took the same required courses "because she takes better notes than I do," he said.

Although Clinton asked his wife to attend college to help him, he currently has the higher point standing. He is majoring in history and she hopes to become an elementary teacher.

Study time is hard to arrange around the Gilbert home and it usually takes place after 11 p.m. "Sometimes we study all night," Mrs. Gilbert said.

Because Clinton has a habit of reading out loud when he studies, she has him study in another room so she can concentrate. He used to watch television instead of studying but this problem was solved about two years ago when the television went on the blink. They didn't have it fixed.

"We might buy a TV after we graduate," he said. "I restrict my TV viewing to holidays now." The children watch television at their grandmother's house next door, giving the parents additional time to study.

Despite his busy schedule, Gilbert still finds time to help others, according to his wife. While attending ACC, he helped a physically handicapped woman to and from classes.

Due to their hectic routine, the Gilberts share household chores. "Finding enough time to do everything is difficult with us taking different classes and being gone different days," she said.

Gilbert hopes to attend a seminary after graduation and Mrs. Gilbert plans to teach. They want to stay in Eastern Kentucky. However, he never knows where the ministry will lead them.

"It took a lot of nerve to go back to school after being out for 16 years," Gilbert said, "but it sure has been worth it."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- An officer in Morehead State University's Department of Military Science is featured in a recent book about the Vietnam war.

The combat actions of Maj. Ben Waller, associate professor of military science, are described in "Beyond Combat," written by Army Chaplain James M. Hutchens.

Waller, as a first lieutenant, was platoon leader with the 1st Battalion of the 173d Airborne Brigade in November, 1965, and Chaplain Hutchens was accompanying his unit.

Waller's reactions under an attack by the Viet Cong in the "Battle of Hill 65" are described in a chapter of the book. Both Waller and the chaplain were wounded during the attack.

The battalion later received the Presidential Distinguished Unit Citation, the highest award given to U.S. military units, and Waller was awarded the Silver Star.

"The battle of Hill 65 will be fought in the minds and memories of these men as long as they live," Hutchens wrote. "Most important to each soldier, regardless of any decorations, is that he lived to tell about it."

A native of Chicago, Waller is an eight-year Army veteran. He received his commission in the infantry upon graduation from the University of Illinois.

His duties at MSU include instructing military science classes and advising ROTC cadets. He is an active member of the Morehead Optimist Club and is a fraternity adviser.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Dr. Ottis Murphy, associate professor of education at Morehead State University, has a reputation as a straight shooter.

He is an expert on flintlock and percussion long rifles, which he builds and shoots.

A native Kentuckian, Dr. Murphy became interested in long rifles about 25 years ago. In 1950 he started repairing original rifles. Since he was not sure of the quality of metal in the barrels, he decided to build his own rifles using modern, safe steel.

Murphy's favorite rifle is a 45-caliber flintlock which he assembled himself. He carved the maple stock which fits into the octagonal barrel.

He also made his two powder horns--a small one to carry finely-ground priming powder and a larger one for coarser shooting powder. He uses 45 grains of powder for target shooting and about twice as much for large game. He molds his own lead shot.

"I've always been interested in hunting and shooting," Murphy said. "I became interested in the long rifle because it's a traditional weapon used by our ancestors." His great-great-great grandfather used a long rifle when fighting for George Rogers Clark.

He hunts in the Pioneer Weapons Hunting Area of the Daniel Boone National Forest in Rowan County and near his farm in Menifee County. He is a member of the Kentucky Long Rifles of Morehead and the National Rifle Association.

Although he claims his shooting eye is not so sharp as it once was, Murphy still sometimes competes in target shooting. He was a member of the 1966 Indiana team and the 1967 Tennessee team which fired against Kentucky long rifle teams.

Murphy was a member of the 1969 Kentucky long rifle team that defeated Ohio's team at Otway, Ohio, and won the rights to the Ohio River and 25 pounds of black powder.

The experienced rifleman has been teaching his colleagues in the MSU School of Education the art of shooting the flintlock.

Dr. John Payne, head of the Department of Professional Laboratory Experiences, claims he can construct a rifle as well as Murphy but cannot out-shoot or out-walk him.

Murphy and Dr. Billy Moore, an associate professor of education, are planning to hunt bear in Canada next spring.

"If Ottis said he'd shoot a bear, then he will," Payne said. "He not only uses a pioneer weapon, he also has the pioneer spirit."
