MOREHEAD MARCHES ON!

Another successful milestone in the advancement of one of Kentucky's youngest but among the most important educational institutions has been passed. The Morehead State Teachers College has gained another year of prestige. The last year has seen many changes made so that this college may continue to grow and achieve its rightful place in the mountains of Kentucky.

For one thing the institution inaugurated a new president. Although comparatively young in the college field, his has been a rich experience in education. He has had an admirable record for the first year indicating that we may expect even greater things as he becomes more seasoned with the needs and problems that confront any major educational institution such as the Morehead State Teachers College is.

Strides have been made toward the advancement of athletics and physical education in the school, with competent men now at the heads of those important phases of college existence.

The summer graduating class was larger this year than in 1936; there have been some changes in the faculty intended to place the school scholastically on a higher plane; organization has been paramount.

Morehead marches on.

STROLLER EXPLAINS FOREST FIRE LAWS

The new fire laws passed by the recent legislature and explained editorially, in part, in these columns, this month is given an even broader definition by Karl M. Stroller, Mt. Sterling, district ranger of the Cumberland National Forest.

For the benefit of those who have not read this law, it is quoted herein from Chapter 32, Session Acts of 1936:

"Section One: It is hereby made the duty of any person who starts or conceals, starting, or originates, any fire for any purpose within the boundaries of any forest land within this Commonwealth, whether they be public forest reserves or public parks or not, to totally extinguish such fires before leaving them unprotected, and if he should fail to do so and should abandon same whereby damage and injury is produced to growing timber on land upon which the fire was started, or to which it may be communicated, he shall be guilty of misdemeanor and upon conviction be fined not less than $10.00 or more than $100.00, or imprisoned in the county jail not less than 10 days and not more than 100 days, or both fined and imprisoned at the discretion of the court or jury trying the case."

Ranger Stroller explains that this law makes it unlawful to allow any fire to escape to the woods, either carelessly or accidentally. This applies to all citizens living either within or near the boundaries of the Cumberland National Forest. It is not necessary to be the person actually starting the fire, but if one allows his children or anyone else to start any kind of a fire, or if he leaves a fire thinking it is out and it starts up again, he has violated this law.

It is hoped that this law will go a long way in preventing forest fires which have been a serious menace in the past and all through this dry season. For the benefit of those who are not familiar with the boundaries of the Cumberland Forest, the Red River Ranger District is the northernmost portion of the forest and includes all or parts of Rowan, Morgan, Mennee, Lee, Powell, Wolfe, Bath and Estill counties.

SO THIS IS AMERICA!

Did you know that only 7 per cent of the world's population is in America? Did you know that America has more than one-half of the world's goods? These are facts, and that is what is graphically explained in a bulletin issued by the Lee Clay Products Company. It reads:

"You and I are the envy of millions of people. We are just a couple of American citizens, but men and women come from many lands to find our secret. They are amazed at our high standard of living—at the things which we enjoy and take for granted but which are within the reach of only a few people in their countries. The population and land area in this country are comparatively small compared to the rest of the world. But its percentage in the worldly goods, its enjoyment of comforts and usage of new inventions and achievements is greater than anywhere else."

"What exactly is our standard of living and how can we measure it? Translated into facts and figures, it can be set down easily as follows:
"The United States has only 6 per cent of the world's acreage and 7 per cent of the world's population.
BUT
"We harvest more than half the world's foodstuffs.
"We have half the world's communication facilities.
"We have nearly half the world's railway and electric energy.
"We produce 92 per cent of the world's automobiles.
"Twenty-two million of these automobiles run over 600,000 miles of paved roads here in the United States.
"We consume half the world's coffee, half the world's tin, half the world's silk, one-third the world's coal, two-thirds the world's crude oil.
"Our education system and our scholarly works assure everyone a free education, are the envy of the world. In 1932, a depression year, we spent more than 3 billion dollars on education which was more than the amount spent on education by all of the other countries in the world. The United States is the only country in the world to put one out of every five children through high school and one out of every 116 through college.
"We have produced three times as much wealth as the whole world had been able to produce up to 1776. And this wealth has been so generally distributed that the average man here became a magnet to attract others from all over the world.
"Most workers in America are property owners and as such may be called capitalists. In 1930, 14 million families owned their own homes. More than half of all the farmers owned their own farms. In 1934, including postal savings, there were more than 49 million savings accounts in banks throughout the country. At the beginning of 1934 there were over thirty million and one-half million dollar life insurance policies. In addition there were over eighty-one and one-half million industrial policies calling for payment of almost eighteen billion dollars.
"Is this a social order worth every protection and safeguard?"

One Year Ago This Week

County Judge Charles E. Jennings ordered deputies into Haldeman to "protect lives and property," with a strike appearing imminent.

Will Rogers and Wiley Post were killed in an airplane crash in Alaska.

D. C. Caudill, Rowan county treasurer, announced the return on sales tax to Rowan county during the year was $21,746.63, around four times as much as paid in 1935.

WHAT OTHER KENTUCKY EDITORS ARE SAYING

Sending Fathers To The Poor House.

Once Seth Parker told a story about a son sending his father to the poorhouse. The father had grown too old and rheumatic to take care of the old farm any longer and so Frank, the son, who had a farm of his own, induced his father to come and live with him.

For a couple of years things went along smooth and satisfactory but finally Frank's wife died and in due course of time, Frank married a second time, and his second wife was an entirely different kind of woman and it wasn't long until she notified Frank that she was already tired of his had hanging around and that she should bundle him up and send him over to the poorhouse where he probably belonged.

Seth doesn't explain why a loving and dutiful son should listen to that brand of advice from a second wife, albeit, he ultimately surrendered and prepared to comply with the wife's orders.

He then goes on to tell about Frank's little son Peter by his first wife and the love the little fellow had developed for his grandfather. When Peter was a young boy the grandfather spent weeks in hunting up for Indian blanket exactly like one he's already had for years and presented it to Peter and his mother.

On the day when the grandfather was to be taken to the poorhouse, little Peter who was heartbroken on account of the exile which had presented his own blanket to the grandfather so that he might have two to keep him good and warm in the winter time, had had a new thought about the matter and slipped out to the buggy, extracted his own blanket and took it with him up stairs to his room.

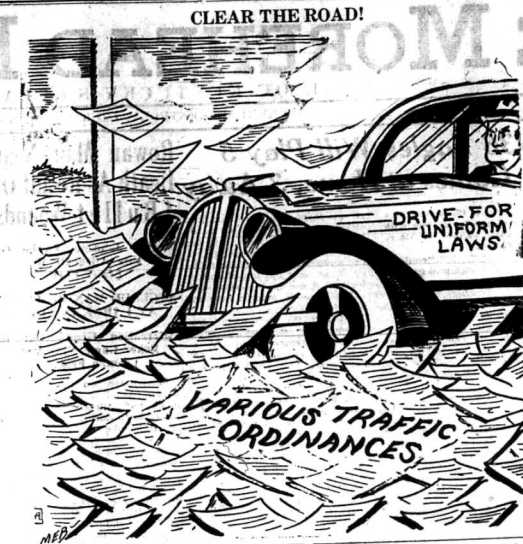

There his father found him stretched out on his blanket crying as if his heart would break because his grandfather was being sent away.

"I thought you were going to give your grandpa your blanket to take along with him," said his father coming at once to the point.

"I was," said Peter, "but I had forgotten something and I'm saving it."
"What are you saving it for?" said his father.
"I'm saving it for you, Dad, when I have to send you away to the poorhouse like you are you're doing with grandpa."

We don't know, of course, whether this story of Seth's is true or not but I do know his; that it recals a similar and true story in our own experience; an actual occurrence in the community in which we were born and brought up. A perfectly fine father, industrious and a good citizen, the father of a half-dozen children, all married and in good circumstances, was allowed to go to the poorhouse because none of his children would consent to give him a home in the few years left to him.

If there is one sin more unconscionable than another, it is the ingratitude of children toward parents, who, through no fault of their own, have no real home to turn to in their declining years.—Bourbon News.

THIS WEEK IN MOREHEAD

MOSQUITOES: Cooler weather has brought some relief from mosquitoes, which are worse in Morehead this year than ever before. However, the insects continue a menace and so far as can be ascertained, no concentrated efforts to eradicate or diminish their numbers has been made.

This column suggested recently that the city could spend money for no better cause than buying a cheap grade of oil to put on stagnated ponds and holes of standing water in Trip-Lett Creek. The suggestion has widely gone for naught, would require only a few dollars to do this, but it seems that Morehead people must go on suffering night after night from these insects, who could be partly curbed for a small amount of money if some civic-minded organizations such as the men's club or women's club would take the initiative, they would have very little trouble in raising sufficient funds by popular donation to do this work. So much could be done with such a small amount of money and a great deal of suffering eased if they would take the leading role, as they have so often done in the past, to get this thing done.

DEMOCRATS: Whether a good old-family fight among Democrats is good for the party in the final election is a matter of conjecture. A year ago, two heated Democratic primaries resulted in a top-heavy Democratic victory in November, while in previous years the primaries have ended in a draw. The primary heat that much of the primary opposition that lost behind the ticket.

This was aired, more or less, at the Democratic meeting in the courthouse last Saturday. A battle of words certainly ensued there, with the result that many left the room. Whether this will result in a party which will fall or prove as a greater incentive to both factions to fight remains to be seen. The least that can be said is that if all the Democrats associated keep in the same fighting mood as they had Saturday, and work for a common cause, then one of Morehead's most illustrious families received a signal and deserving honor in the late A. J. Miller and Mrs. Miller of this city.

SCHOLASTIC HONOR: Paul Sparks, graduate of the Morehead State Teachers College who married a girl from one of Morehead's most illustrious families received a signal and deserving honor in the late A. J. Miller and Mrs. Miller of this city.

Mr. Sparks, who is now a teacher in Louisville, is from Lawrence county. He married Miss Mary Sue Miller, talented daughter of the late A. J. Miller and Mrs. Miller of this city.

New $30,000 water works system begins operation at Vine Grove, Ky.

This fund has been a salvation to many counties. Without it they would have been unable to do any work on the county road system. I have had wonderful cooperation from all county officials who seem to be pleased with the treatment they are receiving from his department, at least, we have had no complaints, nor have we been accused of any political activity or favoritism.
"Governor Chandler or Mr. Talbott have never even indicated an interest in any certain road project or have they suggested the employment of any person for road work or tried to influence my activities in any manner."

Synopsis—In the wreckage of San Francisco, following the great earthquake, with fires breaking out in various sections, Blackie Norton, owner of the padlocked Paradise Music Hall on the Barbary Coast, forgot his anger that Mary Blake, whom he had engaged as singer when he needed a job badly, who had left him for a prima donna role at the Tivoli Opera House, and got engaged to the Nob Hill millionaire, Jack Burley. All that was past—all he wanted was to find Mary. He loved her; she loved him. If he hadn't taken her, fresh from the triumph at the opera back to his music hall to sing to the rowdy customers, all might have been well. But now Burley was dead, but Mary, who was with him, was not in the wreckage that killed Burley. He had searched all night for her and at dawn had come seeking his boyhood friend, now Father Mullin. He found the priest ministering to the injured and dying in a stable.

OUT OF THE RUINS

Chapter Twelve "Blackie!" called Mat as Norton started to leave him. "I saw Mary go on. She done all right! She's a great kid." Blackie, not trusting himself to speak, patted Mat's shoulder, and went to Tim who was ministering to a wounded man on a cot. "Tim," he said—and the name of his friend sounded like a supplication. Tim stood up and looked across the cot at Blackie. A rush of their old boyish friendliness for each other welled up in the eyes of both. "You've got help me find Mary, Tim."

Father Mullin studied that new, chastened expression on Blackie's face. "What do you want to find her for? The Paradise is gone." "I don't want her for that." He took Father Mullin's question for a refusal of help, all but staggering from weariness and his emotional experiences of the night. Father Mullin's face lighted up and he cried: "Wait a minute."

Sister Agatha, look after this injured man, will you?" He joined Blackie and led him to a church uncovered the face of the dead girl. "No, he is not the one," he said, crossing himself. "Hope you find her, pal," said the soldier, and he and his companion resumed their journey. Louder and closer grew the almost continuous booming of dynamite explosions, and the crumbling of a dynamited building was so close that the dust it raised settled upon them.

"They're getting nearer," said Blackie, his heart sickening at the thought that Mary's body might be buried in the wreckage of the building that flames would devour it.

"Give me a hand with this beam, Blackie." They lifted the heavy timber. There was no body under it. They moved to another timber, straining their back muscles. "I thought we were a million miles apart, Tim," said Blackie.

dead— isn't he?" Blackie did not need to reply. She read the answer in his expression. "It's God will," she said. Blackie made for Octavia and Fillmore streets, passing a broad line, passing improvised stoves made of brick in the street upon which people were cooking. Dazed almost helpless, he at last reached the spot where he was to meet Father Mullin.

Then his benumbed senses heard his name called. The voice was elated and joyful. He scarcely recognized it as that of Father Mullin until the priest had grasped his arms, crying, "I've found her! I've found Mary!" His throat was so dry and parched that it was several moments before Blackie could frame the question that tortured him. "Is she all right?"

"Yes, she's all right. Come on." Father Mullin's arm about his shoulders steadied Blackie and they went toward Lafayette Square, passing a continuous procession of refugees, loaded with provisions and household goods. After a time, Blackie spoke.

"Does she know I'm— She knows you're safe." As they approached Lafayette Square, they heard voices singing "Nearer My God to Thee." High above the others arose one clear soprano voice.

"It's Mary!" said Blackie. His face alight with joy, he quickened his steps and reached a high spot in the square so he could look over the refugees. A number of them were gathered about Mary Blake who, her white dress hanging in rags, her hair falling about her shoulders, sat on a bench singing. In her arms was a little dead child whose mother knelt at her feet quietly sobbing.

Blackie looked at Mary and was transfixed; tears came into his eyes, ran down his cheeks. "I want to thank God, Tim. What do I say?" "Say what's in your heart, Blackie."

Blackie fell to his knees. "Thanks, God! Thanks. . . I really mean it."

Mary looked over the head of the kneeling woman, and saw Blackie on his knees. She gave the child to his mother, left the singing refugees and walked straight towards Blackie. He stood up to meet her, his arms outstretched, and she went into them as into a haven of refuge. A great shouting came to them; "They've stopped the fire! The fire's stopped!" "We'll build a new San Francisco," said an aged man with conviction. The End. Bank clearings 27.2% over same week of 1935.

Their arms entwined about each other, they offered a silent prayer, giving thanks that both were alive.

ignitary who was binding a Chinaman's broken arm. "Monsieur, I'd like to leave a while—to help a friend."

"Go ahead, my son." Dawn had broken when Blackie and Father Mullin emerged from the stable, but the light, filtering through the smoke and dust, was cold, flat and cheerless. About the confusion of noises of the streets, arose explosions of sound, followed by a rumbling as of falling buildings. A truckload of Marines passed and Father Mullin asked them what the explosions were.

"They're dynamiting to stop the fire," was the answer. "Blackie, have you looked for Mary around the Lyric?"

"As well as I could alone," replied Blackie, still in a daze. "I found Burley. The quake got him. They were together."

"The soldiers are working there now. We'll try again." Father Mullin paused, raised his eyes and his lips moved as though he were uttering a prayer. It seemed to strengthen and encourage him for, through his own daze, Blackie saw a smile on his friend's face. "Come on. We'll try the Lyric."

They joined the soldiers who were looking among the masses of broken masonry and timbers for bodies while the fire kept creeping close to them.

"Are you fellows looking for a red-haired girl?" asked one of two soldiers who passed them carrying a shrouded body on a stretcher. Father Mullin stopped Blackie's quick forward step, and himself

"I knew I'd never lost you for a minute boy." Together they lifted one end of the great beam, moved it a foot to one side. Underneath it was the crushed body of Alaska, nugging to his chest the loving cup filled with gold coins which had been awarded to him at the Chickens' Bar. They stood looking at him until a man's voice spoke to them.

"We've got to dynamite, boys. You'll have to leave." In a moment a number of Marines were about them, digging into the wreckage, making holes for placing dynamite. Father Mullin lowered the beam upon the body of Alaska, and crossed himself. Blackie stood unmoving, dazed, chastened. Father Mullin took his arm and led him away. A minute later arose a warning shout, followed by an explosion that sent the still standing portions of the walls of Lyric Hall crashing into the street.

They passed the site of the Valencia Hotel. It had been four stories high, but now the top floor was level with the street. They questioned a policeman.

"Those on the top floor stepped right out of their windows to the street," he said. "The others were out of luck."

"We haven't tried Nob Hill, the Burley home," said Father Mullin. "Then there's one other place—her teacher's, Madame Albani. You go to Nob Hill Blackie. I'll try Albani's. I'll meet you at the corner of Octavia and Fillmore Streets."

Without replying, Blackie headed for Nob Hill; his friend took the opposite direction. Almost exhausted, he had never once thought of food or drink during all of that horrible night—Blackie slowly climbed Nob Hill, following a wall. The heat was intense. His hair was matted with dirt, blood and perspiration. Smoke and dust got into his red-rimmed eyes. Suddenly out of the murk—

It might have been early dawn instead of oncoming daylight—a man came running down hill. He shouted over his shoulder: "Get back! They're going to dynamite!" Blackie kept wearily on up hill until he reached the top. The Burley house and the one next to it were belching forth great volumes of smoke, shot every now and then with lurid bursts of flames. Through the smoke he saw a dozen Marines moving about. He knew what they were doing; he had seen enough preparations for dynamiting to understand. He waited a moment and then trudged on.

As he neared the Burley place, Mrs. Burley, followed by several servants with hastily gathered household articles, came out. She stepped on the front lawn and looked down over the burning city.

"It's the retribution of God!" she said slowly. Blackie approached her. "Mrs. Burley, I'm looking for Mary Blake. Is . . ."

"She never came back." She looked into his begrimed face, his red eyes. Some shuffling look in her eyes drew her attention. She caught his hand. "My boy is . . ."

(Continued from Page One) people of Rowan county want the return of a general districting of law and order as existed during prohibition.

"We see no reason why the people of Rowan county want court dockets to be swamped by law violations doubled and an increase in automobile accidents caused by a cheap grade of 'moonshine' whiskey peddled by the slinking bootlegger."

"We see no reason why the people of Rowan county will vote for the bootlegger."

"We challenge anyone to prove that conditions are worse today than they were during the days of prohibition. We are even now compiling the following statistics and within due time these will be placed before every voter of Rowan county, to refute the morass of lies being spread by those working for local option." Those opposing local option announced the following officers had been elected in their group: J. H. West, president; Ray Wendel, secretary; Millard Moore, treasurer; and S. B. Muters, director. This campaign manager has not been selected.

Democratic Meeting Ends In Walk-out

W. E. Crutcher, campaign manager of a temporary chairman and former state Representative Lyle C. Tackett was being elected as temporary chairman of stating that it was illegal, according to the by-laws of the state constitution to elect officers at this time. Richard Clay, who was later elected president, said that it is now a meeting of the Young Democratic Club of Rowan county and that the matter of the state charter would be taken up later. At this point Senator Arnett and most of the Chandler-Beckham delegation left.

The Rhee-Logan group then elected all the officers. There were no other nominations than those elected. Officers elected were: Richard Clay, president; Leland Hall and Frank Laughlin, vice-presidents; Luther Cijek, secretary; Arthur Caudill, treasurer. Tom Logan, president of Kentucky Young Democrats, said Tuesday he would call the executive committee together early in September to rule on the intra-organization dispute in Rowan county. Logan said he had received no official report on the meeting. He said he ordered the Saturday election after Lewis Arnett of Louisville had investigated complaints of one group that it had not been informed when a meeting for election of officers was held. Logan said he would call representatives of both groups to appear before the committee in Louisville, probably the first week in September.

Bub' Tatum Here For Brief Visit

Arthur "Bub" Tatum, Morehead High school product, who does his football playing now down at the University of South Carolina, is visiting his parents here this week. He will leave Friday for Columbia to begin practice with the Gamecocks.

Tatum made something more than a creditable showing with the freshman eleven at the school last year, and will be in there fighting for a regular end position on the varsity this fall. Newspaper reports indicate that he has a good opportunity to make his letter this year, and should prove one of the Gamecocks stand-outs in his junior and senior year.

Most of this year's South Carolina eleven will be composed of sophomores. Tatum reports a huge athletic building program in the school, with South Carolina laying plans for a Southern Conference championship.

Sheriff Takes Over City Police Duties

Sheriff J. E. White and a posse took over law enforcement duties at Manchester, Sunday. The town had been without police protection since Police Chief Harve Zarn was killed from ambush last Sunday night. The city jail was empty for the first time in years.

White arrested 14 men on drunkenness charges at the County Judge D. R. Garrison fined each $19.55 and sentenced each to nine days in jail.

Police Judge R. D. Zarn, brother of the slain police chief, handed his resignation to the City Council. Steve Keith refused to accept an appointment to succeed Magistrate Nancy Thacker, who was killed two weeks ago.

A supplemental regulation has been drawn up which contains a provision that land from which no soil-depleting crop is harvested in 1936 will be classified as used for the production of a soil-conserving crop, provided a soil-conserving crop is planted on the land prior to September 1. This means that land upon which there has been a crop failure may be reclassified as soil-conserving, provided a soil-conserving crop is seeded on it before September 1, and also that any idle crop land may be considered as soil-conserving if soil-conserving crops are seeded before September 1.

Druth May Check Poultry Because of the druth, the expected increase in poultry production may not materialize, according to the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky. Prospects of higher priced feeds are causing increased marketing of poultry intended for layers, and hens also. Eggs have been exceptionally high prices for some time, and both eggs and poultry may bring good prices through the late summer, fall and winter, according to present prospects.

Utopians to Camp on Kentucky River Utopia club members from the central counties of the state will have their summer camp at Camp Daniel Boone on the Kentucky river in Letcher county August 13-16. A camp at Earltington, in Hopkins county attracted 34 Utopia club boys and girls from Hopkins, Barron, Hancock, Bartonson, Hart, Simpson, Logan and Fulton counties.

Only One Payment In Soil Program In the new Agricultural Conservation program, only one payment will be made to a farmer during the course of the year. Under the old commodity program, several payments were made during the year. Rules and regulations announced by the AAA include provisions for the making public of payments to producers, the base acreages of the individual producers, productivity indices and county association expenses. Payments will not be made public until at least 30 days after they have been received by producers.

Trench Silos Save Druth - Year Feeds Trench silos have increased in numbers in Kentucky since 1929 when six Fulton county farmers built silos of this type to provide feed for their dairy herds during the winter following the drought of that year. The cost of these silos, of digging silos and filling them amounted to only about $1 a ton of silage, reports Earl G. Welch of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture. One reason for the popularity of the trench silo is the cheapness of their construction and of filling them.

of the usual amount of canning... Milk still gives the most value for the money, even though it has advanced in price. Of course every farmer should have cows that will supply milk for the family, even in a drought year. Milk is especially important where there are children. If possible, each child should receive a quart daily. Dried evaporated milk can be substituted for whole milk. Dried milk when purchased in large quantities is cheaper than evaporated milk and may be used in soups, desserts and beverages.

Whole wheat bread, best is more valuable as a food. Rice may be substituted for potatoes. Wheat cracked or cooked whole makes delicious cereal products which cannot be surpassed in food value. Hominy may be made from the whole grain of corn... A fifth or sixth of the money available for food should be spent for meat, fish and eggs. To get round or flank steak, chuck, neck or shank for roast and steaks and salmon instead of fresh fish. Money may be saved by buying dried fruits in large quantities. Prunes should be included in each expensive method of adding sweets to the menu. The druth may reduce the supply and increase the price this year.

NOTICE

Bids will be received at the office of the County Superintendent of Schools until 10:00 A. M. September 7th, 1936, to supply wood and coal to the schools of Rowan county for the school year 1936-37. Coal must be free from slack, of good quality, and screened over a 2-inch screen or larger. Each load shall be weighed on scales approved by the Board and the person to whom the bid is awarded. Claim must be accompanied by weight report signed by the person designated by the Board to weigh each load. Coal contractor will be required to sign a contract and to
