MOREHEAD, Ky. --- "I believe students generally are returning to the nostalgic era of the 1950's."

Speaking was Robert E. (Woody) Byrd, the newly-elected president of Morehead State University's Student Government Association.

He feels the Vietnam era had students looking for radical leaders to solve the world's problems but now they are taking a more realistic position.

Byrd, 23, has been a resident of Morehead for the past four years. He is the first graduate student to win the SGA presidency.

His main career interest is political science. After receiving his master's degree next year, he hopes to serve in public life, perhaps in city management.

Byrd came to MSU with a friend who was a music major. From his previous experience of performing with bands, he decided music also should be his area of study. However, his plans changed abruptly when a professor discovered he could not read music.

"That's when I decided I should pursue another subject," he recalls with a smile.

(MORE)

Woody Byrd 2-2-2-2-2

Byrd formerly sang in a young rock band. They chartered a jet and toured Europe and gave all of their profits to charity.

Later, he sang in a rock band campaigning for U.S. Rep. Wayne L. Hays (D-Ohio), chairman of the House Administration Committee. Byrd worked in his office last summer as a researcher.

His experience in Washington gave him an inside view of the workings of Congress. He feels the American political system is suffering because of Watergate and related matters.

As for campus politics, Byrd says he sought the SGA presidency because it was the best way to get involved with people. "I don't think student government should just be an organization to get sidewalks painted and concerts scheduled," he said. "I want our students to wake up to MSU and to feel proud of their school."

He admires the Greek letter organizations because of their unity. "I want to unite the SGA to represent all segments of the student body," said Byrd.

As SGA president, Byrd serves by virtue of his office on the Board of Regents and the Executive Council of the Alumni Association. He was recently elected to the National Institute of Student Governments for a two-year term.

"This job carries a lot more responsibility than most people realize," Byrd said. "I hope I can live up to it."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- How about octopus for dinner?

The dish is commonplace for students enrolled in a gourmet cooking class this summer at Morehead State University.

"The class gives individuals interested in foods a chance to be creative," reports Mrs. Floy Patton, the instructor. "They deal only in specialty foods such as flaming desserts, souffles, omelets, fancy breads and meats and salads."

Along with learning to prepare international foods, it provides students an opportunity to study equipment and utensils and pronounce foreign dishes.

Laboratory sessions are arranged to allow individuality. Students can work alone and recipes are discouraged. Creativity is the theme.

Ethnic food preparation is a bonus offered in the course. One such recipe included leg of lamb, argolemono (lemon soup), salad-salata, moussaka (eggplant casserole), braided bread and melomacarona (honey cake). "Not your everyday meal," observed Mrs. Patton.

"Ethnic foods introduce students to other cultures," she said. Her son recently opened a Korean restaurant in Denver, Colorado. "He did it solely to introduce that culture to the area," she said.

Both men and women are interested in gourmet cooking and have enrolled in the class. "I think men are more creative but women are better managers," Mrs. Patton added.

Men generally want to do only one thing at a time, she said. "Men as a rule don't have as much opportunity to learn, but they are usually good."

One former male student is now a chef at a dinner theater in Central Kentucky.

Home economics teachers, faculty wives and secretaries are among individuals who have come to class with their utensils and curiosity. "It's a little more difficult to teach when working with varied backgrounds but anyone with basic cooking knowledge can become a gourmet cook," Mrs. Patton maintains.

Is Christianity an extension of Zoroastrianism as well as a child of Judaism? Why do Jews and Moslems fight when their religions are so akin? Why are Christians and Moslems so different while their religions are so similar?

These and other questions will be explored at Morehead State University in a new series of religion courses taught by the Department of Philosophy.

Five courses have been added with three scheduled during the fall semester which opens next month. Available as electives in Humanities, the package includes World Religions 1 and 2, 20th Century Christian Thought, Early and Medieval Christian Thought and Modern Christian Thought.

The world religion courses are studies of the history, development, practices and beliefs of religions such as Judaism, Christianity, Islam, Zoroastrianism, Hinduism, Buddhism, Taoism and others.

Courses in Christian thought are concerned with issues such as the nature of God, Jesus, man and the good life as dictated and seen by Christian leaders from the conception of the religion to the present.

Dr. Frank Mangrum, head of the Department of Philosophy, said the courses were initiated in response to student requests.

Religion Courses 2-2-2-2-2

George Luckey, associate professor of philosophy, who teaches world religions, plans to ask members of various religions to participate in the course. He cautioned that students should not expect the courses to answer all of their questions about religion.

Luckey said his course would be presented mainly by lecture because he feels it is the best method of presenting the material objectively.

Dr. Mangrum said of the new courses:

"Since students today are seriously questioning traditional beliefs and values, although they do not understand them, we feel they should have the opportunity to study the arguments and the evidence to which religious leaders have appealed to support their beliefs, values and practices."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University's summer graduates were encouraged here Thursday by Gov. Wendell Ford not to let current problems diminish their faith in the American political system.

Ford, who received an honorary doctoral degree during the ceremony, told the 516 members of MSU's largest summer graduating class that their active participation in politics and government would demand accountability from officeholders.

"I believe the conduct of political activity must be your business and you must make it your business," he said. "All of us who are in politics have to demonstrate political morality and repudiate anything less."

The state's 49th chief executive expressed confidence that the credibility of American politics would be restored because, in his words, "the people, not the politicians, have the final say."

MSU President Adron Doran awarded diplomas for 295 master's degrees, 208 bachelor's degrees, 11 associate degrees and the University's first two educational specialist degrees.

More than 3,000 persons witnessed the ceremony at Wetherby gymnasium.

(Special to the Floyd County Times)

By Anne Shelby

This summer marked the end of a special project conducted in Floyd County for the past two years. The purpose of the project, directed by Roland Jones, was to show how a public library and an adult education program can work together to provide better services to the community, particularly to adult basic education clients.

The project was funded by a grant to the Appalachian Adult Education Center at Morehead State University from the U.S. Office of Education. Similar projects were conducted in Birmingham, Ala; Columbia, S.C.; and Wayne, Cabell and Putnam counties in West Virginia.

The local project developed new services for Floyd Countians which will continue after the federal funding has stopped and the special project staff has disbanded.

The bookmobile now serves adult education centers all over the county, the library mails materials to anywhere in the county upon request, and Floyd Countians can call the library to find out where to go if they need the services of any local agency.

Library Project 2-2-2-2

In addition, the project provided some $9,800 in materials for the Floyd County Public Library. Many of the materials are easily read books and pamphlets with information for adults on subjects like health, child care, housing, and money management. The collection also includes fiction, records and instructional materials for adults studying for the high school equivalency examination.

The success of the project in its first year resulted in other special projects in Floyd County. The project was funded to continue for a second year to assist other libraries in Kentucky in adopting similar services in their communities. Morehead State University's Johnson Camden Library received a grant to furnish special materials for the Floyd County Public Library and the Kentucky Department of Library and Archives contributed funds for the bookmobile to continue its evening runs to communities in the county and to adult basic education classes.

Another result has been the addition of two adult education instructors who teach adults at home, using project materials. The home instruction project is funded by a grant to Morehead State University's Appalachian Adult Education Center from the national "Right to Read" office.

Library Project 3-3-3-3.

As project director, Jones worked with librarians and adult education teachers in Floyd County to coordinate and improve the services of the adult education program of the Floyd County Board of Education and the regional public library in Prestonsburg.

Others who contributed to the project's success according to Jones, were Supt. Charles Clark; Harlan Stubbs, regional ABE director; the late James Salisbury, former county director of ABE; Homer Lee Hall, regional librarian; Alice H. Sipple, Floyd County librarian; and Betty Davis, bookmobile librarian.

In addition to coordinating the continuing project, Jones traveled to eight other Kentucky counties to assist libraries in expanding and improving their services for adults. He worked specifically with public libraries in Ashland and in Breathitt, Jackson, Daviess, Greenup, Leslie, Henderson and Johnson counties.

Jones also has gone to Dallas, Las Vegas, Cincinnati, and New York to publicize and promote the Floyd County project before national organizations of librarians and adult educators.

The Floyd County project has been nationally recognized as a successful demonstration of improved services through cooperation between the public library and the adult basic education program.

Special to the Morehead News

By Edmund Shelby

Two cars collide on a country road. A farmer, living close to the scene, sees the accident and calls for the police and an ambulance.

After the police and ambulance arrive, life saving measures are started on the sole survivor. The "Emergency Medical Technician," (EMT) applies direct pressure dressings to the bleeding and makes sure the patient is breathing well. He treats for shock and, with the aid of the driver and policeman, transfers the patient to the ambulance. Later in the hospital, the patient stabilizes and eventually recovers.

This case is hypothetical but not unbelievable. Many Rowan Countians are alive today, because of the skills of EMT's.

Morehead and Rowan County have six EMT's available. All are members of the Morehead Fire Department. They are Jeff Barker, Scotty Barker, Dale Caudill, Tim James, Gary Lanham and Kim Reynolds.

How did they come to be EMT's?

As firemen they enrolled in the EMT course offered by Morehead State University. The county ambulance service paid for their training and, after 81 hours of intensive study, they received EMT certificates.

Is the program working?

"I would say that each of us has helped in saving three or four lives," says Scotty Barker.

MOREHEAD, Ky --- Mrs. Lucy Silvey of Vanceburg is not Morehead State University's typical freshman.

She is a 60-year-old grandmother who has reared eight children and who decided to enroll as a full-time student because in her words, "the campus is an exciting place and going to college is a challenge."

Mrs. Silvey commutes from Vanceburg to Morehead each day with one of her daughters, Mrs. Jackie Brooks of Garrison, a junior at MSU.

Says Jackie of her mother's situation:

"I think it's great. Not many people get to go to college with their mom."

Mrs. Silvey's husband, Orville, is a disabled Army veteran and, as a result, she received VA benefits which help defray her costs.

Mrs. Silvey, who is majoring in art, says the idea of going to college grew out of the many trips she made to the MSU campus with her daughter.

"I realized this fall when Jackie registered again that I really wanted to find out if my dream could come true," she recalls. "We went to the admissions office and then to the VA counselor and, within three hours, I was a student with a full schedule of classes."

When she enrolled, it had been 39 years since she had been in a classroom as a student. Mrs. Silvey was graduated from Lewis County High School in 1935.

Her youngest child, Jayne, is a 14-year-old sophomore at LCMS. "She is so busy with school and being a majorette that my being gone during the day is not even noticed," the mother said.

The other Silvey children are scattered in Ohio, Michigan, Maryland and Florida. Mrs. Silvey says they will not be surprised to learn of her new status.

"My children have learned to expect anything from me," she said with a smile.

Mrs. Silvey did not know until she enrolled that MSU's Caudill Fellowship Plan provides free tuition for those 65 and older. Would she care to wait five years and come back?

"Heavens no. I want to do it now. After all I'm not getting any younger."

Federally insured loan funds are still available for the current academic year, reports the Kentucky Higher Education Assistance Authority (KHEAA).

Some $700,000 in state funds remain for loans to Kentucky resident undergraduates attending Kentucky colleges.

Elmer D. Anderson, director of student financial aid at Morehead State University, advises that students should first apply for a federally insured loan from a lending institution in their home locality before going to KHEAA, since these loans are designed as to supplement conventional sources, not replace them.

The loans are available for one year and are renewable upon application for each successive year. No interest will accrue throughout the student's college career and for a nine-month period following his graduation. Thereafter, interest begins to accrue at the annual rate of seven per cent and the student has a 10-year period to repay the loan.

Special to the Morehead News

1939 Flood

By LAUREL HOSKINS
MSU Student Journalist

If you go down to Glenn Hutchinson's shoe-repair shop just off First Street, you'll probably find him and a few of his friends sitting out on the front porch. Ask him about the flood of 1939 and, although he says he didn't come to Morehead until 1942, he can show you where he found sand left by that flood in the tops of his windows when he replaced them a few years ago.

Thirty-five years later, many Rowan Countians recall the flash flood of 1939 like it was yesterday. It was one of the worst this area has ever known, the result of an Eastern Kentucky downpour that struck around midnight on July 5, yielding 2.89 inches of rain in three to four hours and which caused the Licking River and Triplett Creek to overflow.

Twenty-five persons are known dead as a result of that tragedy and some say more died but the bodies were never found. Walls of water as high as 20 feet swept through Morehead carrying approximately 200 homes away, ruining half of the town's business places, and affecting over 500 families. Most of Morehead, Farmers, and Clearfield were under water. First Street, formerly known as Railroad Street, was said to have been under ten feet in some places. Many people spent the night in treetops awaiting rescue. A carnival in Morehead for the 4th of July weekend, set up behind what is now the Firestone store, was completely wiped out.

Damage to crops and other farm property in the county was estimated by Thomas P. Cooper, head of the Department of Agriculture, at what was then Morehead State Teachers College, to be over $500,000 according to "The Courier Journal" of July 6, 1939. The "Courier" also reported that the mayor at that time, Warren C. Lappin, estimate Morehead's property damage to exceed $1 million.

Herb Elam, owner of Elam's Grocery on East Main Street, is among those who recall the incident like yesterday. "Around seven or eight that evening, most of the people in town were down at the carnival. A gentle rain was falling but soon blew on over into the east. By 10:30 or 11, the clouds blew back in and the rain came pouring down," Elam said.

He and his father ran a wholesale grocery store located in part of the building where the Big Store is now on Railroad Street. Some friends of the Elams who lived near the grocery called to let them know the water was getting up, so the Elams went down to the store to stack the groceries out of the way. "My father had just bought a new Chevy a couple of months before," said Elam, "and we drove it down to the store. He parked across from the store but I told him to pull it up on the station platform in case the water got up too high." The Elams then went on into the store to begin stacking the groceries.

In 1929, water had risen to about four feet and gotten into the grocery store so a three-foot concrete wall had been built in front of the store to keep the water out if it happened again. When the water got up even with this wall, Elam decided to stack bags of flour up against the door to help keep it out in case it rose any higher. When he finished stacking 16 bags of the flour, which Elam estimated as taking about two minutes, he said he looked out and the water "was eye-level against the plate glass window. I decided it was time to get out of there." Elam headed for the upstairs and the water came rushing in behind him.

The family spent the night trapped on the second floor of their grocery. Elam said they could hear people screaming and crying for help but couldn't do anything. The water kept rising and they decided that, if necessary, they would tie themselves together with clothesline to help each other in case they were washed away also. But about 5 a.m., the water began to go down. There was still about four feet of water in the store, but when it got down to three, Elam waded through and opened the doors.

Outside, Elam recalls, three or four cars were piled up against a building down the street. Elam's new Chevy was still on the platform but the water had gotten so high the seats were wet. Boxcar had been picked up and set back down beside the train tracks and one house was sitting in the middle of the tracks.

(MORE)

1939 Flood 4-4-4-4-4

One incident which Elam relates with a grin was of how one of the town "characters" spent the night on top of a telephone pole crying, "Save old Riley! Somebody save old Riley!"

But the humor soon disappeared when he told how it took three weeks of hard work to clean and salvage what they could of their business. It took two weeks to get the money and records cleared up, which in the excitement had been left out on top of the safe and later had to be dug out of the mud. Elam estimated their loss at about $18,000 to $20,000. In today's terms he said this would be comparable to $75,000.

"I hope I never have to go through anything like that again without knowing how it's going to come out," Elam said.

Another resident, who asked that her name not be used, also remembers the flood well. She was a newlywed that year and was working to help out at home. She had just gotten home and was doing jobs around the house when the flood started.

"I heard a sound like a bunch of rolling barrels. I looked out and there it came. We went out on the hillside in back of the house. Our neighbors were still asleep and we did everything trying to wake them up. I shot guns and threw rocks. Things were bumping into the side of the house. And you know, they slept through the whole thing!"

(MORE)

1939 Flood 5-5-5-5-5

She said that water was up even with the window sills on the house, and had come up almost even with the bed, but the mattress and the neighbors hadn't even gotten wet.

The next days were spent with a shovel trying to clean up the mud and debris. Tears came into her eyes when she spoke of the trips to the funeral home to identify bodies. They lost a niece in another flood that struck in Breathitt County that same night, causing great damage and loss of lives there.

There was a time she "hates to remember. You just don't know how it was."

The 1939 flood left many people homeless and without food or clothing. The County Health Department administered typhoid shots and health services to everyone, food units were organized, and the homeless found shelter with friends and in the college dormitories. Local and state chapters of the Red Cross and Salvation Army and volunteers set to work clearing up the aftermath and rebuilding.

Rowan Countians began to carry on with life as they had before the flood struck. But it is a time those who survived will never forget.

A federal law entitled Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act went into effect on Tuesday, Nov. 19, giving college and university students access to their records.

The lack of federal guidelines has slowed many institutions in their plans to implement the law. Roger L. Wilson, Morehead State University's vice president for student affairs, said MSU is awaiting those guidelines.

"We will follow whatever guidelines are established," Dean Wilson said. According to Section 438 (a) (1), the institution has 45 days in which to comply with a student's request to examine his records.

MSU's interpretation of the legislation is that it applies only to records intended for school use which would normally be transferred to another institution or to parties outside the University. This specifically applies to records of students currently enrolled which are kept in the office of the Registrar.

Institutional guidelines have been developed to provide for implementation of the law at Morehead State University. It should be noted that some modification in the University approach may be necessary when federal guidelines are published by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Privacy Law

2-2-2-2-2

Guidelines presently established by Morehead State University include provisions for requesting access to records, identification of persons making the request, process of making inspection appointments, supervision during the inspection of records, and charges for copying records.

If a student wishes to inspect his records, he should go to the Registrar's Office at the University and make application to do so. It is the University's intent to assist and protect the student in the implementation of the law.

Upon receipt of official guidelines from the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, any necessary modifications in the University guidelines will be announced.

Students desiring a copy of the present bill may secure one at the office of the Dean of Students in Howell-McDowell 301. Changes and amendments to the present law also will be available as they are received.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Vada Crosthwaite always wanted to learn to play the piano but most of her life she was just too busy raising a family, farming, and teaching school. Now that her children are grown and she and her husband have retired, she finally has time and she is able to take free piano lessons under Morehead State University's Caudill Fellowship which offers free classes to persons 65 and over.

"I could play some by ear," she says, "but I wanted to learn to play right. And after this adult education started, I thought, well there's my chance. I always heard it said that you're never too old to learn, and I wanted to test it."

What she found out is that if a person really wants to learn something, their age doesn't make much difference. Mrs. Crosthwaite enjoys her weekly lessons, but the best part, she says, is sitting down and playing between housekeeping chores, especially in cold weather when the garden and flowers are gone.

Nora Murray agrees. "It's too bad when you stop learning," she says. "And it's very hard to do it on your own. I need a push, and going to class gives it to me."

Mrs. Murray and her husband, Ken, take classes together under the Caudill Fellowship. They aren't enrolled for credit and are not required to buy books, participate in class discussions, take tests, or go to all the class meetings. But they do all those things because they find the classes so stimulating that they don't want to miss anything.

Mrs. Murray admits it was hard to get her courage up to enroll in that first class. "I was scared to death," she says, "but I finally got myself together and went. Now there are so many courses I'd like to take. I'd like to spend my whole day there, just going from one class to another."

The Murrays plan to continue taking classes. "It gives you a lift," Mr. Murray says. "It builds your pride. It makes you get up, get dressed, and have breakfast. You have something to do. It makes you feel like a person."

Taylor Ellington had to get up early to get his farm chores done in time for his 8 a.m. art class under the Caudill Fellowship.

Ellington describes himself as a farmer, carpenter, radio-TV technician and a craftsman. He does woodcarving and makes Kentucky long rifles by hand. Drawing is something he'd always been interested in but never pursued until he enrolled at MSU.

"Ever since I was a child, I've always thought I'd like to draw," he says. "But I got disgusted with what I drew and gave it up." He says he learned a lot from the class and now he can draw for fun and for relaxation and can apply what he has learned to his crafts.

Leslie Carroll and Clarence Conley, teachers at Ashland Area Vocational-Technical School, enrolled in an MSU class in Ashland under the Caudill Fellowship.

Carroll, who teaches auto mechanics, is taking two courses. "He's been taking classes for years," his wife says, "and he's always busy at something, working, going to class, or working on his papers."

Clarence Conley, who teaches carpentry, cabinetmaking and millwork, also has been taking classes for years. His main reason for taking them, he says, is not to get more money or to work for a degree but "just to get more knowledge."

John A. Duncan has a degree in engineering but he's also interested in accounting, gardening, coin and stamp collecting and fishing, among other things. "That's the secret of retirement--keeping busy," Duncan says. "I enjoy it. I didn't at first. But after the tension wears off, you can enjoy it. And on these cold, snowy mornings, it's good to stay in."

This semester Duncan enrolled in "Income Tax," which deals with tax laws and tax problems for both corporations and individuals. Next semester, he thinks he'll take a course in gardening. "As long as I live I'll like to study and learn something," he says.

WINCHESTER, Ky. --- A partnership of higher education and industry is bringing graduate study to the front door of Winchester area residents.

Morehead State University and the Winchester Axle and Transmission Plant of Rockwell International Corporation have launched a cooperative effort to make graduate classes in business administration available at the Rockwell facility.

More than 40 persons were enrolled this semester, including 27 Rockwell executives. The program is designed to provide sufficient courses to qualify individuals for a master's degree in business administration (MBA) within three years.

"We are extremely pleased with the program and the opportunity it affords our staff and other persons in this area," said Thomas D. Richardson, Rockwell plant manager. "According to our information this is a pioneering effort for Rockwell International."

MSU President Adron Doran, who recently toured the Winchester plant in connection with the MBA project, described the cooperative arrangement as an example of how a regional university can serve the public with "a practical and relevant approach to mutual problems

MSU also has off-campus MBA programs at Maysville and Ashland and another is being developed in Pikeville. The programs involve faculty members from MSU's School of Business and Economics traveling to each community to teach late afternoon and evening classes. At Rockwell, classes are taught inside the plant.

All students--Rockwell employees and others from the community-- must meet admission requirements established for MBA study on the campus in Morehead.

"We are convinced this program will continue to prosper and it is due primarily to the splendid spirit of cooperation at Rockwell and among our graduate faculty," said President Doran.

Persons desiring more information about the MBA classes at Rockwell should contact Dr. Richard P. Baxter, Dean, School of Business and Economics, MSU, Morehead, Ky. 40351.
