Chip Allen, a recent graduate of Morehead State University has completed a four-month study of the "cost of living" in Rowan County.

Between the middle of the fourth quarter of 1975 and end of the first quarter of 1976, the cost of living in Rowan County rose only 1.24 per cent or at an annual rate of 3.71 percent, based on the four-month study period. This is slightly below the national rate of inflation.

The Consumer Price Index for Rowan County is composed of 100 items from the broad categories of: food, housing, utilities, transportation, health and recreation and other. The rates of inflation for each category, shown at annual rates, for the four-month study period were: a drop of 23 per cent for food, a rise of 22 per cent for housing, a rise of 7.2 per cent for utilities, a drop of 10.7 per cent for transportation, a drop of 1 per cent for health and recreation and a rise of 9.3 per cent for other goods.

Obviously, the drop in food costs and the increase in housing costs were the most significant items. The overall effect of declines in three categories and increases in three categories resulted in the overall small change in the price level.

The macroeconomics classes at MSU for the past school year participated in the data gathering part of the project. It is currently planned that the cost-of-living project will be continued to inform Rowan Countians of the effect of price changes locally. Dr. Joe Copeland of the Department of Economics will direct the project for the 1976-77 school year.

(MORE)

A special food price index is calculated each month. Using December, 1975, as a base, food prices fell to 93.9 per cent of that level in January, 1976, to 88.6 per cent by March, and rose back to 91.1 per cent of the December level by April. A special survey in March revealed that food prices in Ashland were 5 per cent above the Rowan County level.

MOREHEAD, KY.---Morehead State University's Johnson Camden Library has received a series of documents of interest to history buffs in the Morehead area.

The materials relate to the establishment and operation of a Civilian Conservation Corps Camp (CCC) in Rowan County area during the Depression years. The Camp which offered public employment to young men first was located on private land in Clearfield and later moved to an area in the Daniel Boone National Forest, east of Morehead, where it continued operation through 1941.

The documents include information about persons assigned to the camp and the projects in which they were involved.

Another series of documents traces the history of the mural in the main lobby of the Morehead Post Office.

The painting which adorns the lobby wall is not the original which was done in 1939. The first was installed with a faulty adhesive and later fell from the wall. Damaged beyond repair, it had to be discarded.

After efforts over a period of nearly two years, Morehead postmaster W. E. Crutcher arranged to have another mural prepared and installed. Frank Long of Berea, an artist of national reputation, did both murals for which he was paid a total of $760.00.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University President Adron Doran, in his last official appearance at an MSU academic event, Thursday challenged the school's 404 summer graduates to fill the nation's needs for "strong individuals who regard human worth and dignity."

Dr. Doran, who is retiring next Jan. 1, was the principal speaker at the commencement ceremony and later conferred degrees on summer graduates for the 23rd time.

In a surprise move by the MSU Board of Regents he was awarded an honorary doctoral degree.

MSU also recognized five other persons with honorary doctoral degrees.

In his address, Dr. Doran told the graduates he was not retiring because he felt he was too old to go on.

"I am retiring, not because I feel I have served too long, but to give opportunity for some other individual to take up the torch and lead the University during the decade ahead," he stated.

Dr. Doran continued:

"This is a new and bright day for all of you. Tomorrow will be newer and brighter for you if you determine to face the challenges, assume the responsibilities, fulfill the obligations, perform the tasks and transmit your knowledge and skills to succeeding generations."

The 66-year-old educator was inaugurated as MSU's seventh president in 1954 and by the time of retirement, will have served the institution for 22 years and eight months.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- How can a mathematics professor at a regional university be a pioneer?

The question has been answered by Nicholas County native Johnnie Fryman, the first person to earn a doctoral degree in the joint program sponsored by Morehead State University and the University of Kentucky. Several others now are pursuing degrees in the program.

Dr. Fryman has served on the MSU faculty on two different occasions, returning in 1969. In addition, he was a math teacher at Nicholas County High School and the University of Tennessee.

In his doctoral research, Dr. Fryman worked with shortening the placement examination given by MSU and four other institutions.

"The project involving the placement exam has been around for some time," he stated. "My dissertation topic was chosen to fit in with what the department already was doing."

But a doctoral degree has not always been Fryman's goal. In fact, he can trace his doctoral aspirations back to 1962.

"I really didn't have the doctorate as a goal until I spent a year at the University of South Carolina," he recalls. "What we were doing called for intensive study and it shaped my own goals for the future."

The owner of earlier degrees from MSU and the University of South Carolina, Dr. Fryman was quick to take advantage of the convenience of the joint program.

"I was glad to have the opportunity in this program because I already had sufficient work in my teaching field," he said. "It was beneficial to be able to commute and save some expense and not uproot my family."

Dr. Fryman is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Claudie Fryman of Carlisle and is married to the former Marylene Watkins of Carlisle. They have two children.

The joint program merits nothing but praise from Fryman.

"The joint doctorate was ideal for someone in my situation," he said. "I have recommended it highly to several persons and will continue to do so. I appreciate the treatment received from both institutions. They were great."

MOREHEAD, KY, --- Steve Ford traded athletics for aesthetics and has no regrets.

The Morehead State University senior is a promising artist whose creative drive comes from rock music.

His athletic success is a matter of record. As a senior at Valley High School in Louisville, he starred in baseball and was a regional wrestling champion. His athletic endeavors continued at the University of Kentucky where he was a member of the baseball team for two seasons.

However, all things do end, and Ford's baseball career was no exception. He dropped out of the UK program during his junior year, an event that surprised everyone who knew him.

"I felt that I wasn't getting anything done on the field," he stated. "There were several reasons why I dropped out, and none of them made sense to anyone but me." he added.

The art in his life stayed and has become his life's work as well as his main pasttime.

"I developed more than a passing interest in art in high school. But, I really didn't get into it seriously until later on." he stated.

Ford has used his talent in many ways, drawing for almost all types of stores, businesses and organizations. "When you talk about commercial art, I feel that you are repeating yourself." he stated. "After all, most artists are doing their work to sell something, therefore, most art is really commercial art."

Ford is currently a full-time student in art at Morehead State University, working part-time as an artist for MSU's Division of Public Information. And, as one might imagine, he is doing professional art work on the side.

A big break in his career came recently when he signed a contract with the South End Galleries in Louisville. Now, Ford has someone to share the cost of production, and it has already paid off. "The hardest single work I have done so far is a print called "Belvedere." he stated. "With the support of the gallery, we have marketed this print on a large scale."

"Belvedere" is a print of the Louisville riverfront. Three-thousand prints were made and sell for $20 and $25 each.

Ford is quick to give the credit for his success in art to one thing, rock music.

"I just feel that the rythems and drives of rock music help me find both inner peace and determination while working on something," he stated. "I don't feel anyone can do art work on inspiration alone, it takes hard work, and rock music helps me to keep working even after I have reached the point where I am actually too tired to go on," he added.

This might seem unusual, getting inner peace and strength from something as uncontrolled as rock music. However, after putting 300 hours of work into "Belvedere," Ford could be lucky to have something to push him forward.

He even has the system down to a point to listening to different styles and speeds of music to do certain types of work. He uses slow, moody music for more delicate stokes and faster music for stronger strokes.

(MORE)

Ford should well know the difference in music styles.
He is an accomplished guitar player and has played professionally with a group know as "The Rooster Band."

As for giving up sports for arts, he says: "I hope my art lives longer than my baseball."

MOREHEAD, Ky.---Nine students at Morehead State University are learning first-hand about the energy crisis in America.

They are involved in a National Science Foundation project to check the potential of an untapped resource, Ohio Black Shale.

The shale, very prominent in the Farmers Quadrangle, a 70-square-mile area of Rowan County, are sources of oil and uranium. The project's goal is to determine if the shale can be collected and converted profitably without damage to the environment.

Participating in the study are Charles Sharpe, Taylorsville senior; Glen Marshall, Springfield, Ohio senior; John D. Harris, Hamersville, Ohio senior; Steve E. Harris, Tollesboro senior; Roy H. Boggs, Hazard junior; Marka Kim Kannady, Erlanger senior; Donald B. Doyle, Mount Sterling sophomore; Michael L. Manning, Casstown, Ohio senior; and Jeffrey B. Conley, Martin senior.

A grant totaling $14,800, is funding the project which runs through Aug. 13. Dr. Jules DuBar, professor of geoscience at MSU, is the project advisor. Sharpe, a geology major, is the project director.

"The project is running smoothly at this point," stated Sharpe. "At the beginning, we wanted to run at least 50 samples for oil analysis. We were over half done in early July and should have 28 more before the project closes," he added.

Several major companies and groups have shown a definite interest in the group's findings. Among the interested parties are the U. S. Geological Survey, Ashland Oil, Inc., the U. S. Environmental Protection Agency and several major universities.

(MORE)

Sharpe realizes the MSU study is only a first step in the field. However, the group wants to do a good job with a final written report and oral report in Washington, D. C. before the National Science Foundation.

"We know this is a one shot deal for us as students," he said. "But what we do here could be the foundation of another project in the future."

Dr. DuBar had similar thoughts on the project.

"I feel a project of this type could really benefit the science program at MSU. The NSF awarded only 69 grants from 440 applications, and only three were in geology. A lot will depend on the project report in December."

As for preliminary findings, Dr. DuBar noted:

"Of course, the best way to collect the shale would be by strip mining. But there would have to be an easy way to extract the oil so that it would be profitable."

He added that part of the project involves an environmental impact statement.

News file

(Special to Lexington Herald)

Morehead State University opened the fall semester Aug. 23 with more than 7,300 students expected to enroll.

Class work began Aug. 26 and continues through Dec. 10. Final examinations for the fall semester are scheduled Dec. 13-17.

The annual reception for new students was conducted Sunday afternoon as students were occupying MSU's 19 residence halls.

- HOUSING -

Full-time students have priority on dormitory space at MSU but part-time students may apply for housing on a space-available basis.

Each residence hall has a council which serves as the governing body. Students are elected from each floor as representatives to the Council. Open House hours will be conducted from the second week of the semester through the week preceding final exams.

All MSU residence halls operate on a "self-regulated" basis. Doors to women's residence halls are locked at midnight on weeknights and 2 a.m. on weekends.

The University also maintains housing for married students. Apartments and mobile homes are available for couples with or without children.

- ORGANIZATIONS -

More than 100 student organizations are available. Socially, nine sororities and 14 fraternities are open to qualified students and more than 30 academic organizations have been established.

Fourteen honor societies and five religious emphasis groups also are available. Each student organization has a constitution approved by the Committee on Student Life and on file with the Vice President for Student Affairs.

All students are members of the Student Government Association. Elections are held each year for SGA offices.

MSU was the first public university in Kentucky to add student representation to its University Senate. Two students are elected from each of the six academic schools. Student representation constitutes one-fourth of the University Senate membership.

- VEHICLES -

All students have the option of registering their vehicles. Student traffic regulations are enforced by campus security officers. Motorcycles are permitted on certain campus streets.

- ACTIVITIES -

Student entertainment is scheduled through the Student Government Entertainment Series and the Concert and Lecture Series. Most "name" concerts are supported by student activity fees and admission is granted to all full-time students with identification cards.

The Miss MSU Scholarship Pageant is the social highlight of each spring semester and Homecoming Weekend (Oct. 21-23) is the significant event of the fall term.

MSU sponsors a full program of intercollegiate athletics for men and women. Full-time students are admitted free to all regular season athletic events on the campus. Intercollegiate athletics at MSU are conducted in accordance with rules and regulations of the National Collegiate Athletic Association, the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women, the Ohio Valley Conference and the Kentucky Women's Intercollegiate Conference.

Realizing that every student cannot participate in intercollegiate athletics, MSU also offers competition in 18 individual and team sports on an intramural basis.

MSU's football team performs in the 10,000-seat Jayne Stadium and the basketball team occupies Wetherby Gymnasium (5,000-seats).

The hub of campus activity is the Adron Doran University Center which houses the University Store, post office, offices of the Student Government Association, cafeteria, grill, and special dining and meeting rooms.

Among special opportunities for students at MSU is the unique Personal Development Institute which is headed by The First Lady Mrs. Mignon Doran.

Counseling, tutorial, health and placement services also are available to students at no cost.

Student publications include a weekly newspaper, "The Trail Blazer;" a literary magazine, "Inscape;" and a magazine, "Parnassus." All publications produced by students are supervised by the Committee on Student Communications Media.

Information on attending MSU is available for the Office of Admissions.

Registration for the spring semester is scheduled Jan. 10-15, 1977.

MOREHEAD, KY --- Study of the sky, stars, planets and signs of the zodiac has been going on since the dawn of man and more so on clear nights.

Now, as the result of hard work on the part of Dr. Charles Whidden, associate professor of physics at Morehead State University, MSU is able to offer a view of the stars at any time.

Dr. Whidden's creation is the new MSU Planetarium, located in Room 212 of Lappin Hall. Visitors may now study stars of the local sky at any time of the year.

One of the most unusual aspects of the planetarium is that it is almost completely home-made. Of course, the components could have been purchased but Dr. Whidden feels that he went about it the right way.

"A good example of the way we improvised was the construction of the dome," he explained. "It is a 20-foot dome but we had to make it an elliptical shape in order to fit the room available. Most commercial domes are rounded and simply would not work."

The main attraction of the planetarium, however, is the star projector. And, as in the case of the dome, it is a product of Dr. Whidden's imagination.

"We ordered a plastic sphere with the positions of the stars imprinted on it," he said. "Then we started drilling holes to represent the stars, with the sizes of the stars proportional to each other. We are to a point now where we can project down to the fifth magnitude."

Whidden

But, as Dr. Whidden is quick to admit, there is no real substitution for studying a clear night sky.

"On our spherical projector, we have about 1,700 stars," he said. "On a very clear night, nearly 3,000 might be visible. However, these extra clear nights don't occur very often. A regular night of visibility would include less than the planetarium."

Dr. Whidden's involvement in the project is unusual.

With degrees in physics from Georgia Tech and Virginia Tech; his preliminary training was in a totally different field.

"My interest in astronomy was born when our physics department decided to branch out," he said. "I decided to get involved with the stars and I have really gotten into it."

Dr. Whidden says he likes to show the planetarium to visitors.

"It is available to outside groups on an appointment basis," he said. "Our problem is that I do all the shows and have to work everything around my other classes. It is important that people contact me as early as possible if they want to use the facilities. Our seating is limited to 30 persons at one time."

A native of Nashville, Ga., Dr. Whidden has been a member of the MSU faculty since 1968.

MOREHEAD, KY --- Africa, once the dark continent, is a hot bed of emerging nations and Dr. Perry LeRoy, professor of history at Morehead State University, has been studying these events firsthand.

Dr. LeRoy traveled in May and June in two of the oldest countries in the world, Egypt and Ethiopia. It was his fourth trip to Africa and change is constant.

"I didn't detect any individual bad attitudes toward the United States in Ethiopia," he stated. "But the ruling directory in the country has taken some steps which might be considered unfriendly. The land reforms put into effect since the revolution are socialist and therefore might be considered unfriendly."

In Egypt, Dr. LeRoy found that attitudes are changing for the better as far as U. S. interests were concerned.

"I definitely could sense that the feelings in Egypt were softening toward the United States," he stated. "Reopening of the Suez Canal is symbolic of Egyptian feelings that peace has returned and trade could be resumed."

However, according to Dr. LeRoy, the peace is still on very shaky ground. Too many problems still threaten the security of Africa and the Middle East.

"People in the Arab countries are not necessarily anti-Jewish," he stated. "But they still demand the dissolution of Israel and the establishment of a multi-religious state. However, that system has not worked too well in Lebanon."

"The recent famine was the largest single contributor to the rebellion which occurred in Ethiopia," he stated. "And it undermined several other governments in Africa. Another such famine and other revolutions could occur."

The southern nations of Rhodesia and South Africa are of special interest at the moment.

"The government policies of those countries in the past are the cause of most of the problems," he said. "Native leaders in these countries have wanted land, most of which is controlled by the ruling white minorities, and young leaders are leaning to the left in their campaign for majority rule."

One of the main factors in that situation is that African groups often have more loyalty to a tribe or clan than to a national movement.

"Many of the militant movements of southern Africa are handicapped because the people are tribe-oriented," he stated. "There is no cooperation between tribes and there is a lack of communication, material and funds for anti-government military activities."

The United States government, according to Dr. LeRoy, has its goals and policies confused. He feels they are not consistent with the basic principals of democracy.

"Our government is confused between political and economic goals," he said. "We support repressive governments in Africa where capitalistic interests are exercising influence. In short, a country which lives by majority rule is supporting countries which have minority rule."

MOREHEAD, KY --- Following more than 22 years of service to the region, state and nation, Morehead State University President Adron Doran has announced his retirement effective Jan. 1, 1977.

Dr. Doran, MSU's seventh president, has motivated the growth of the University from a tiny teacher's college little known outside the state to one that has received acclaim for its service to Eastern Kentucky, Appalachia and the nation.

Enrollment has increased more than 1,000 per cent since Dr. Doran's inauguration in 1954 and upwards of $70 million has been expended in campus construction. In addition, MSU has served as a pace setter in one of the more controversial areas of the recent past Army ROTC.

MSU first considered the possibility of putting an ROTC program on campus late in 1967 and early 1968. This was a turbulent time in American history, with the Vietnam conflict a very real issue on campus.

According to Arthur L. Kelly, retired Army colonel and former professor of military science at MSU, strong courage was required to bring ROTC on to any campus at this time.

"Dr. Doran had the courage to bring ROTC on campus during a crisis period while the vogue was to take it out completely," he stated. "He also had the vision to see the necessity of having ROTC both for the good of the students and the nation."

The program, put into operation in the fall of 1968, was first operated under a two-year compulsory arrangement. As the Vietnam conflict escalated, and the Cambodian issue came to the front, further attacks on ROTC became common.

Doran
2222222222222222

Kelly maintains that Dr. Doran's two main policies concerning the situation on campus kept MSU free of major student unrest.

"Dr. Doran let everyone know that the program was part of the University, not an outside entity," he stated. "And, he didn't mind a student communicating a message if that student didn't interfere with the rights of others."

However, pressures against compulsory ROTC continued and in April, 1971, the Board of Regents approved the proposal of a special committee appointed by Dr. Doran to make the program completely voluntary.

Dr. John Kleber, professor of history at MSU and a member of the committee assigned to study ROTC, remembers that decision.

"The decision that was made concerning the abolishment of the mandatory program was made not because of any dislike of ROTC, but because many people, including Dr. Doran, felt that the MSU program was strong enough to place it on a voluntary basis," he stated.

This decision led to another, one that was to make MSU a pioneer of sorts in the ROTC field. It involved the creation of a nine-week, one credit-hour course entitled National Security.

According to Dr. Kleber, the idea for the course was solely Dr. Doran's.

"Dr. Doran had an idea for a class that would give the student an overview of what National Security was all about," he stated. "In addition, the course could be used to help students decide if they wished to enter the ROTC program."

William Ewers, assistant to the president for military affairs, and a retired Army Sergeant Major, feels that the National Security program at MSU, and the other places where it was adopted, saved ROTC nationwide.

Doran
33333333333333

"At the time the decision was made to offer National Security, ROTC was dying out all over the country," he stated. "The original idea was to take approximately 100 people and give them an 'introduction to ROTC' without having them enroll in the program itself."

The program was successful to the point where ROTC enrollment went on the upswing and has stayed on the upward trend for the last five years. According to Dr. Kleber, a change in attitudes has made the National Security less important for the recruitment of students for ROTC.

"Attitudes have been changing concerning ROTC, and more people have gone straight into the program rather than wait to go through the course in National Security," he stated.

Dr. Kleber feels that the program has another side that is just as important as the military aspects.

"I feel that the most significant contribution of this class to the University is the calibre of people that we have been able to bring to the campus," he said.

Another innovation in the ROTC program is one that concerns the wearing of uniforms by first-year students. According to Lt. Col. Edward Balda, professor of military science at MSU, the rules are changing.

"The nation-wide rule this year concerning uniforms is that no first-year students will receive one unless they are a member of a color guard or drill team," he stated. "At MSU, we have had a rule for the last two years that a first-year student only had to wear a uniform if they wished to."

Doran

For his contributions to the ROTC Program on a local and national level, Dr. Doran received the Outstanding Civilian Service Award from the Department of the Army. In addition, he has received a "CINC MSU" hat and a presidential flag from the MSU military science faculty.

Dr. Doran, on a leave of absence until the effective date of his retirement, has stated that he and his wife, the former Mignon McClain of Sedalia, Ky., want to "leave the next 22 years of our lives freer of labor, toil, strife, and stress."

(Special to Morehead News)

Morehead State University's Board of Regents adopted an institutional plan for 1976-1980 and named two campus facilities during a meeting Wednesday.

All state colleges and universities have compiled a self-study report for the four-year period to be submitted to the Council on Public Higher Education.

They also approved a compliance program for federal regulations regarding Title IX. The program allows MSU to comply with regulations of the federal government concerning sex discrimination.

In other action, the Board named two faculty and staff housing areas. Nineteen units on North Wilson Ave. were named the William E. Justice Village and a 10-apartment complex was renamed the Charles W. Gilley Apartments. Justice is a current member of the Board of Regents and the late Mr. Gilley was a member from 1957 to 1969.

Attending the meeting were board members Lloyd Cassity and Sam Kibbey of Ashland, Dr. W. H. Cartmell of Maysville, Jerry Howell of Jackson, James Richardson of Owingsville, Cloyd McDowell of Harlan, William Justice of Pikeville, and Jerry Mayes, student representative, and Dr. Charles Pelfrey, faculty representative.

B. F. Reed of Drift was absent because of illness.

MOREHEAD, KY --- How does steak at $4 per kilogram sound to a shopper? Or, how does 8.5 kilometers per liter sound for gasoline usage in a car? If these measures are confusing, then Morehead State University's Center for Metric Education is the place to go for help.

With the federal government's decision to convert to the metric measure, many Americans are going to need "re-education" in conversion of English measure to the metric system. For this reason, federal money is being used to set up education centers across the nation.

Two MSU faculty members, Dr. Louise Quinn, associate professor of business education, and Cecil Roby, assistant professor of education, co-authored a proposal that was awarded a grant of $24,000. The grant will be used to develop a model delivery system for metric education.

According to Roby, the goals for the project are easy to identify.

"Our objectives are to increase the number of elementary teachers who are familiar with the metric system," he stated. "If our program is successful, it is possible that ours could be the model used to educate nation-wide."

Roby added there are problems in dealing with the system on the elementary level.

"The problem on the elementary level is that teachers must be familiar with so many areas," he said. "We must demonstrate to teachers that the metric system is the easiest system of measurement."

This method may be effective on the teachers and their students. But, according to Dr. Quinn, there are other groups that must be reached.

Metric
222222222222

"We must teach older groups the metric system and we must convince them the metric measure is easier," she stated.

One limitation on the program is that, even though it is the only center of this type in Kentucky, it may only serve people in Kentucky's Ninth Educational District, which includes Bracken, Mason, Lewis, Robertson, Fleming, Rowan, Bath, Montgomery, Menifee and Morgan Counties.

According to Roby, this is a problem, but one that can be overcome.

"We have many requests for presentations outside our area, but we can't send people to these places using project funds," he stated. "However, if the group that calls us is willing to fund the trip, we have people to send."

Many methods have been used to advise local, non-school associated, people about the center. According to Mike Craig, administrative assistant in the program, the process has hardly begun.

"We have been contacting, and will continue to contact, businesses and civic organizations to notify them the service is available," he stated.

The American people, according to Roby, are trailing American industry in the conversion to the metric system.

"Business and industry has been switching to the metric system for several years," he said. "Any organization that is involved with foreign companies would be unable to operate unless they used the same measurement system."

The grant to MSU is good for only one year. But, Roby is planning for the future.

By James Wells
MSU Staff Writer

MOREHEAD, KY --- Higher education and Army ROTC are losing a strong supporter from the active duty ranks when Morehead State University President Adron Doran retires effective Jan. 1, 1977.

Enrollment has increased more than 1,000 per cent since Dr. Doran's inauguration in 1954 and upwards of $70 million has been expended in campus construction. In addition, MSU has served as a pacesetter in one of the more controversial areas of the recent past-- Army ROTC.

MSU first considered the possibility of putting an ROTC program on campus late in 1967 and early 1968. This was a turbulent time in American history with the Vietnam conflict a very real issue on campus.

According to Arthur L. Kelly, retired Army colonel and former professor of military science at MSU, strong courage was required to bring ROTC to any campus at this time.

"Dr. Doran had the strength to bring ROTC on campus during a crisis period while the vogue was to take it out completely," he stated. "He also had the vision to see the necessity of having ROTC both for the good of the students and the nation."

"The program, put into operation in the fall of 1968, first was operated under a two-year compulsory arrangement. As the Vietnam conflict escalated, and the Cambodian issue came to the front, further attacks on ROTC became common.

(MORE)

Kelly maintains that Dr. Doran's two main policies concerning the situation on campus kept MSU free of major student unrest.

"Dr. Doran let everyone know that the program was part of the University, not an outside entity," he recalls. "And, he didn't mind a student communicating a message if that person didn't interfere with the rights of others."

However, pressures against compulsory ROTC continued and in April, 1971, the Board of Regents approved the proposal of a special committee, appointed by Dr. Doran, to make the program completely voluntary.

Dr. John Kleber, professor of history at MSU and a member of the committee to study ROTC, remembers that time.

"The decision to abolish the mandatory program was made not because of any dislike of ROTC but because many people, including Dr. Doran, felt our program was strong enough to survive on a voluntary basis."

This decision led to another, one that was to make MSU a pioneer of sorts in the ROTC field. It involved the creation of a nine-week, one credit-hour course entitled "National Security."

According to Dr. Kleber, the idea for the course was solely Dr. Doran's.

"He had an idea for a class which would give the student an overview of what National Security was all about," he stated. "In addition, the course could be used to help students decide if they wished to enter the ROTC program."

William Ewers, assistant to the president for military affairs and a retired Army sergeant major, feels that the "National Security" program at MSU and the other places where it was adopted, saved ROTC nationwide.

Doran
33333333333333333333

"At the time the decision was made to offer National Security, ROTC was dying out all over the country," he stated. "The original idea was to take approximately 100 people and give them an introduction to ROTC without having them enroll in the program itself."

The program was successful to the point where ROTC enrollment went on the upswing and has stayed on the upward trend for the last five years. According to Dr. Kleber, a change in attitudes has made the "National Security" course less important for the recruitment of students for ROTC.

"Attitudes have been changing concerning ROTC and more people have gone straight into the program rather than wait to go through the introductory course," he stated.

Another innovation in MSU's ROTC program concerns the wearing of uniforms by first-year students. According to Lt. Col. Edward Balda, professor of military science at MSU, the rules are changing.

"The nationwide rule this year on uniforms is that first-year students will not wear them unless they are members of a color guard or drill team," he stated. "But at MSU we have had a rule for the last two years that a first-year student had to wear a uniform only if he chose to do so."

And, like most good "soldiers," Dr. Doran has been recognized for his courage and vision.

His contributions to Army ROTC on the local and national levels resulted in his receiving the "Outstanding Civilian Service Award" from the Department of the Army.

(MORE)

Doran
444444444444444444444444

"He won't be around as much in the future but he will always be the CO," said Ewers. "The Army today has dozens of fine officers from our program because Dr. Doran had the courage to stand tall when the chips were down."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- An old NCO club 10 miles from the Demilitarized Zone in South Korea might seem a strange place to conduct a college class but not to Dr. Richard Reser, professor of sociology at Morehead State University.

He spent last year as a teacher for U.S. military personnel under a program of the University of Maryland. His assignments were Japan and South Korea.

For a professor of sociology and anthropology, travel can be of tremendous value in the study of foreign cultures. However, Dr. Reser found some limitations.

"The majority of the time spent overseas on one of these trips is spent at military bases," he stated. "Of course, with Americans around all the time, your exposure to foreign cultures is limited."

Dr. Reser speaks from experience about such a tour because he was involved in the same program 10 years earlier in Europe.

"The trips are enjoyable and, if you count the fringe benefits of a military base, then you really are not sacrificing too much," he added.

As a full professor, Dr. Reser found himself to be among the more experienced teachers involved in the program's Far East section.

(MORE)

"Most of the persons hired to teach overseas have doctoral degrees but nearly all are still below the rank of professor," he stated. "For them, it is a helpful experience to travel in the line of duty."

Speaking of travel, Dr. Reser found time to visit Taiwan, Bali and the Phillipines.

Despite his limited contacts, Dr. Reser made several observations in the countries where he spent the most time, Japan and South Korea.

"I didn't see a shortage of anything in Japan," he stated. "They seem to have full employment. I'm sure there is some poverty, but unemployment is just not noticeable."

"The people in South Korea are as friendly as those in Japan even though the Koreans have a military society," he said. "There is a curfew and taxies stop running at 10 p.m. And you see bunkers and soldiers all over Seoul."

Dr. Reser's most memorable experience occurred on a weekend trip to Northern Japan. After getting off the train, he found himself lost with few provisions. A group of Japanese eighth graders found him and supplied directions and food.

Will he make another teaching trip abroad?

"Absolutely. I'm always happy when I'm traveling."

MOREHEAD, Ky.---The Morehead State University debaters, coached by George (Skip) Coulter, raised the season total of awards won to eight by qualifying a team for the elimination round at the Henry Clay Debate Tournament at the University of Kentucky last weekend.

The team of Gary (Rook) Padgett and Steve Hohmann, Louisville seniors, compiles a 6-2 preliminary record before losing in the first round of the eliminations to the University of Arizona.

Fairdale sophomores Mike Bryant and Mike Shelton compiled a 5-3 record in the preliminaries and failed to qualify for the final round.

According to Coulter, the competition in the tournament was excellent.

"There were 100 teams participating in this tournament, and to make the final round was quite an achievement," he said. "I think this was the best tournament we have attended since I have been here."

Coulter announced this weekend that MSU had received an invitation to participate in the Marx Debate Tournament at Xavier University in Cincinnati. The tournament, held Oct. 30 and 31, is open to 24 teams and has nation-wide prestige.

Eagle debaters will be in action this weekend hosting the Eagle Debate Tournament, Friday and Saturday.

MOREHEAD, Ky.---A common misconception is that a college debater is a person who hides his own insecurity by attacking another person verbally. This is totally incorrect, according to George (Skip) Coulter, debate coach at Morehead State University.

"People have the wrong idea about debate," he explained.

"Debators cannot be insecure people. They must be able to express themselves against an idea with great emotional and mental control."

Coulter, entering his fourth season at MSU, would appear to know what he is talking about. In three seasons, his debaters have won a total of 172 debate awards. And he maintains there are reasons for this success.

"When I came to MSU, a very strong regional debate program had already been established. They were averaging about 20 awards a year, competing primarily in Ohio, West Virginia and Kentucky," he stated.

Another factor has been the approval of six presidential scholarships which are awarded to MSU debaters. In fact, this step was instrumental in bringing Coulter to MSU.

"I came to Morehead because some people told me we couldn't have a topnotch debate program here due to our location," he said. "And, I was impressed that President Doran had high aspirations for the future and success of the debate program."

"The debate scholarships aren't really used as a reward, but the students do earn them over the course of a season," he added. "Considering the fact that most debaters put in between 40 and 50 hours of preparation a week, the scholarships are a definite incentive."

(MORE)

For any program to be successful, you must have quality personnel and Coulter has definite things he looks for in recruits.

"The main characteristic is an alert person with the quick form of intelligence," he stated. "I pay very little attention to speaking ability, unless someone has a real problem. The key is that I want someone who has had success at something."

Coulter feels this year's team could be a very strong one. However, the number of team awards might be down in the 30's or 40's.

"We have a lot of good debaters in our program and have changed our schedule to go to great tournaments instead of just good ones," he stated. "There was nothing wrong with last year but this year's schedule is fantastic."

As far as personnel goes, the team is deep and talented. Gary Padgett and Steve Hohmann, Louisville seniors, return as the top team in experience. Also returning are Fairdale sophomores Mike Bryant and Mike Shelton, last season's novice representative.

Other combinations include Ed Goldblatt, Highland Park, Ill., sophomore, and Becky Skeen, Cottageville, W. Va., transfer, who will replace the graduating Hohmann in January. Freshmen Dwaine Hemphill of Louisville, Ohio, and Gary Browning of Shepherdsville add depth.

As good as some of his debaters have been, Coulter still prefers the team concept over individual performers.

"Instead of a star system, we want a balanced team where both debaters do the job," he stated. "However, the best people go to the best tournaments."

After personnel, Coulter feels the next most important ingredient for any team is preparation.

"The main fundamental of debate is research and that is an area where we have been weak in the past," he said. "We have compiled around 3,000 pieces of evidence on the national debate topic so far and expect to have nearly 12,000 by the end of the season."

To help keep the research in order, Coulter assigned graduate assistant Sterling Gardner of Hillsboro the duties of research director. In addition, he has designed drills for team members to test their knowledge of their information file.

"We drill every one to see how fast they can find individual pieces of information in the file," said Coulter. "If they can't find what we want in 10 to 12 seconds, they have to refile the cards."

One of Coulter's dreams is to have an MSU team compete in the National Debate Tournament. "This might be our year," he said.

Above all, Coulter wants debate at MSU to be an educational experience.

"We want debate to teach the students when to speak and when to keep quiet," he stated. "Debate teaches a person to be rational in thought and temperate in actions toward others."

(MORE)

DEBATE

4-4-4-4-4

"When debaters leave MSU, they should take along confidence in themselves, a variety of educational experiences and a good recommendation as a hard working researcher and speaker," he added.

What is the objective of debate?

In the words of Coulter the coach:

"To teach an individual to attack another person's ideas without attacking the person."

MOREHEAD, Ky.---Two prominent citizens have been reappointed to the Morehead State University Board of Regents.

James M. Richardson of Owingsville and William E. Justice of Pikeville were named by Gov. Julian Carroll to four-year terms expiring June 30, 1980.

Richardson, an MSU graduate, was appointed to the board last year to fill an unexpired term. He is serving his sixth term as Bath County attorney.

Justice originally was named to the board in 1972. He is a realtor and president of Justice Supply Co. in Pikeville.

Both men have been honored for their service to MSU and Eastern Kentucky. A livestock pavilion at MSU's Derrickson Agricultural Complex is called Richardson Arena and a faculty housing area on North Wilson Avenue carries the name of Justice Village.

"The governor's reappointment of these two distinguished Kentuckians indicates his confidence in the manner in which the University is being administered," said MSU President Adron Doran. "We are highly pleased with this action which adds continuity to the administration of the University."

MOREHEAD, KY --- What is the role of a testing center on a university campus?

Dr. Steve Taylor, who heads the Morehead State University Testing Center, sees the facility as much more than simply a screening area.

"My main goals for the center are to expand and broaden the existing testing services, to create interest in new alternatives in testing and to increase efforts in the area of credit by examination," he stated.

As for the expansion of testing operations, Dr. Taylor is hoping to add services which would benefit MSU students and residents in the Eastern Kentucky area.

"We hope to add several things, such as the Law School Admission Test (LSAT), to make them more readily available to the people of this region," he stated.

His idea of new alternatives in testing involve certain areas which have not been considered in the realm of testing in the past.

"There are tests which would undoubtedly be of assistance to persons in career planning and direction," he stated.

Credit by examination has achieved importance on a nationwide basis and Dr. Taylor feels MSU could do more with it.

"There has been a recent trend to use the CLEP battery and departmental proficiency examinations to award college credit," he stated. "A person can earn up to 32 credit hours toward a baccalaureate degree using this method.

TESTING

Other areas targeted for improvement are data storage and recall and group profile data.

"We have been able to use computers to help us with the reading test given all incoming freshmen," Dr. Taylor said. "In the past, it has taken almost four months to get the data from these tests. Now, with computers, we have it much earlier and with a more detailed breakdown."

The group profile data available could give MSU's academic administrators an idea of the direction of MSU's instructional program.

"One way to determine the effectiveness of a person's education is to make a comparison of his ACT scores as freshmen to his GRE scores entering graduate school," he said.

Dr. Taylor is quick to admit that no study is completely infallible and data is only helpful is considered with other factors.

"We are here as a service facility and we welcome any ideas which come to us from students, faculty or the general public," he said. "We have ideas of what functions we need to perform but feedback from the public is the only way to be sure."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- A student leader and an administrator at Morehead State University have filed an official protest to the proposed reduction of bus service between Louisville and Ashland by Greyhound Lines, Inc.

A petition has been submitted to the Kentucky Department of Transportation by Pam Cupp, president of the Student Government Association, and Buford Crager, dean of students.

They asked the agency to delay the Oct. 31 effective date requested by Greyhound and to schedule a public hearing on the company's application to eliminate an afternoon run from Ashland to Louisville six days a week and for a later time on a morning trip.

"The proposed changes in bus schedules will work a hardship on students and other residents of this area and are inappropriate in view of the country's energy problems," said Miss Cupp, a senior from Cincinnati.

"Greyhound is our only means of public transportation and we simply can't afford to lose any service," Crager added.

at Morehead State University, coached athletic teams and with more than average success.

He has coached on every level from professional football in Canada to Pop Warner League on the sandlots of Philadelphia.

In high school football alone, his record of 196-34-6 has been recognized by the Athletic Journal, a national publication.

On the academic side, Dr. Barnes holds degrees from Louisiana State University, the University of Toronto, Canada, John Marshall Law School, the University of Birmingham, England, the University of Ottawa, Canada, and London University in England.

In a coaching career which began as an assistant under Homer Norton at Texas A & M, Dr. Barnes has coached at Waco and Nacogdoches high schools in Texas, Friends Academy in New York, Cheshire Academy in Connecticut, Central Catholic in Detroit and others.

In addition, he coached the Ottawa Rough Riders of the Canadian Football League and at C.W. Post, Hofsta and Morris Brown colleges.

How did a scholar get involved in sports?

"I've always been interested in games," he stated. "The history of my young life was getting into some type of game."

This is reflected by his undergraduate activities at LSU where he played football and boxed. Later, he was to use this experience as both an English teacher and coach.

"I always tried to be a little ahead in coaching," he stated. "I could always try that because I wasn't hired as a coach but to teach English," he recalls.

Some of his coaching stops were better than others.

"I did a lot of coaching at Catholic and private schools and those places were ideal because you had more discipline and participation."

Dr. Barnes did not concentrate on one sport, however. He coached football, lacrosse, boxing, baseball, track, ice hockey and rugby at various times.

(MORE)

"My most memorable win occurred when I was serving as substitute coach at Morris Brown College in Florida," he explained. "We defeated Florida A & M in 1953 and they were working on a more than 20-game winning streak."

Why did he leave coaching?

"I don't regret leaving coaching," he stated. "The players today are bigger, faster, better coached and play better than they did in my time. Also, when I came to MSU in 1963, I decided to concentrate on teaching English."

Dr. Barnes and his wife, the former Dr. Ruth Brewster of London, England, still are involved in competition, showing Persian cats. Their travels to shows have taken them to Chicago, New York, Memphis, Atlanta and Cleveland.

Unlike some, coaching did not sour him on the spectator side of athletics. In fact Dr. Barnes remains a diehard fan.

"I've been to MSU football games at every school in the OVC at one time or another," he added. "I do a lot more teaching on weekends now and can't travel as much but I still enjoy it."

Retirement is not too far away and, like a good coach, Dr. Barnes is ready.

"We plan to stay in Morehead after retirement," he stated. "I suppose I'll take classes at MSU as a senior citizen, raise cats and attend football games."

MOREHEAD, KY --- The hills are alive with the sound of music at Morehead State University and James Ross Beane is happy about it.

A member of the MSU faculty since 1959, the associate professor of music and coordinator of vocal music recently was recognized with MSU's "Distinguished Faculty Award."

"When I came to MSU and sat in on my first registration, I found that only 16 people had signed up for the Concert Choir," he recalls. "On top of that, when I rehearsed that group for the first time, I found there were no tenors."

This might have caused some teachers to go into a state of depression. But Beane was prepared.

"When I was interviewed for this position, President Doran asked me if I thought I could be a music missionary and have the patience to start from scratch and build something," Beane remembers.

How does one build a vocal music program? Beane's answer was exposure.

"I went everywhere in the Eastern Kentucky area performing to promote singing," he stated. "In fact, I did more singing that first year than in my entire college career."

A lyric baritone, Beane holds degrees from Stetson University and Louisiana State University. His performing career, including college, has included trips to Carnegie Hall.

"In Kentucky, the competition is very keen for the top singers," he stated. "It took five years of traveling and digging before we really started getting quality kids."

One breakthrough was the founding of a choral festival at MSU in 1960 which has grown from 150 singers to nearly 600 this year.

(MORE)

The real key to the success of the choral program, according to Beane, has been the success of the music faculty in discovering talent already on campus.

"We always seem to get a great number of kids from the instrumental program with intelligence and ability but no real development," he said. "In fact, some of our better singers come in as band students."

The development of raw talent is always exciting for a teacher and Beane is no exception.

"To be able to bring out hidden talent is a tremendous thrill but there is no comparison to the way you get from working with students who can really sing well when you get them," he stated.

Beane has certain things he looks for in a prospective voice student.

"My first concern is do they sing in tune and secondly, do they read music and, thirdly, what is their voice quality?," he said.

As a conductor of university musical organizations, Beane finds himself favoring music he normally would not use as a performer.

"When I am conducting, I really prefer serious compositions rather than my performing favorites, stage musicals," he stated. "My reason is that I want to be more creative when conducting."

In addition to his teaching duties at MSU, Beane also is the conductor of an independent musical group in Lexington, the Lexington Singers.

Despite his recent honors as a topflight teacher, Beane isn't taking anything for granted.

"We have been maintaining a high level of consistency in our choral groups," he stated. "But we're losing some really good seniors this year and I'm already worried about next year."

For a "Music Missionary." The recruiting never ends.

(Special to The Morehead News)

More than 800 students and active and retired faculty and staff members were on hand Friday night to salute Morehead State University President and Mrs. Adron Doran at a "Bon Voyage" dinner party.

The Dorans are retiring Jan. 1 and will take a Caribbean cruise before making their permanent home at The Oaks in Lexington, starting in mid-January.

The Crager Room of the Adron Doran University Center had a shipboard motif with the head table on the deck of the "USS Appreciation."

Nearly two dozen campus organizations presented gifts and awards to the couple. Among the most popular presentations was one by the College Republicans who made Dr. Doran, a lifelong Democrat, an honorary member of the GOP. The MSU Young Democrats sponsored a dinner for the Dorans last month.

The major personal gift was an original, black walnut "Queen Anne High Boy" chest which was handcrafted by Frank McGoldrick of Versailles, Ky. It was purchased by past and present members of the faculty and staff for use by the Dorans in their new home.

Dan Alford, Alexandria graduate student, dedicated a ceramic mural on the second floor of the Adron Doran University Center in honor of the Dorans. Alford, who also presented a charcoal sketch, created the mural earlier this semester. It will be permanently displayed in the lobby.

Dr. Bill Pierce, dean of academic programs, was master of ceremonies. He was assisted by Dr. John Duncan, vice president for academic affairs. Other members of the arrangements committee were Dr. Rondal Hart, associate dean of academic programs; Don Young, director of alumni relations; and M. E. Keller, director of communications services.

Music was provided by Dr. Walter Barr, Dr. Robert Schietroma, Dr. Randy Wells, Larry Keenan and David and Teena Chinn. Dr. Don Flatt delivered the invocation.

Former Kentucky governors Earle Clements and A. B. Chandler sent congratulatory telegrams which were read to the audience.

Open mainly to members of the university community, the party was conceived to provide students and university employees a special opportunity to recognize the Dorans before they leave the campus.

Out-of-town guests included the Russell McClure family of Frankfort. He is a member of Gov. Carroll's cabinet.

Groups honoring the Dorans included Lambda Sigma, Alpha Epsilon Rho, Alpha Gamma Rho, Agriculture Club, Alpha Kappa Alpha, Black Gospel Ensemble, Campus Ministers Association, College Republicans, Delta Zeta, Geology Club, Academic Honors Program, Sigma Tau Epsilon, Kappa Delta Pi, Kappa Delta, Lambda Chi Alpha, Judo Club, East Mignon Hall, West Mignon Hall, Mignon Tower, Mignon Hall, Military Science Program, Student National Education Association, Student Home Economics Association, Student Nurses Association, Tau Kappa Epsilon and Chi Omega.

MOREHEAD, KY --- Have you ever felt you were getting nowhere and that you were being discriminated against?

Shirley A. Averitt, a native of Ohio County, answered "yes" and now she is now a captain in the U.S. Army.

The daughter of Dr. James W. Averitt of Versailles, she is currently assigned to the ROTC faculty at Morehead State University.

Capt. Averitt had a teaching career for 10 years but decided that it wasn't what she wanted out of life.

"I taught for eight years in high schools in Louisville and for two years at Eastern Kentucky University," she said. But I decided to do something different and I turned to the military."

The Army was not always her only choice. But military life was the key.

"I decided to go into the service and gave consideration to the Air Force," she recalls. "And, though I wanted to be an officer, I would have gone in as an enlisted person."

She says she left civilian life to get away from discrimination against women and is happy she did.

"There is much less discrimination against women in the service than on the outside," Capt. Averitt stated. "Promotions are generally looked at on a time-in grade basis."

But even the Army still has some restrictions.

(MORE)

"As it stands now, four of the 14 major branches of the service, are not open to women and those constitute the combat arms branch," she stated.

One benefit of the Army is travel and Capt. Averitt has done her share.

"I've been in the service three years and four months and I've been stationed on Taiwan and Guam and in the Philipines," she said. "One of the major advantages is to be able to see new places."

As a faculty member in MSU's Department of Military Science, Capt. Averitt is quite involved with women ROTC students.

"About 30 per cent of our total program enrollment is female," she noted. "And that is above the national average."

The role of women in the Army is changing and, according to Capt. Averitt, for the better.

"Methods of training for women have increased to the point where self defense with weapons is required for all personnel," she stated.

Some training has not been added, however.

"Training for women officers still doesn't include any tactics or strategy because women are not permitted to command combat troops," she said. "In fact, women can't be promoted any higher than brigadier general because they can't serve as post commanders."

Despite the restrictions, she likes what she is doing.

"I hope to make the service my career," she stated.

"I recommend the military to any woman who wants the chance of advancement on her own merit."

What would she want to see in the Army of the future?

"I'd like to see total equality in the service with women eligible for any job. However, the attitude of the American people will have to change a great deal."
