MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University's spring semester registration deadline has been extended because of weather problems.

Dr. John Duncan, MSU's vice president for academic affairs, said full-time students will be permitted to register without penalty until further notice.

Students enrolling for part-time classes on campus may register this week from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. through Thursday at Button Auditorium.

Students enrolling in off-campus classes may register and pay fees at the first or second class meeting.

"We intend to give every consideration to students who have been unable to register because of adverse road conditions," Dr. Duncan said.

WINCHESTER, Ky. --- A college degree program offered entirely within an industrial plant? And only for the plant's employees?

This is exactly the situation at the Winchester truck axle plant of Rockwell International where Morehead State University has nearly 50 persons enrolled in courses leading to an associate degree in industrial supervision and management.

A cooperative venture between MSU and Rockwell, the program started during the fall semester and apparently is succeeding.

"We are very pleased with the quality of instruction and the University's willingness to help us do a better job of developing managerial personnel," said Plant Manager Don Old.

His sentiments are echoed by Personnel Director Bill Adair, who coordinates the program with Dr. John Duncan, MSU's vice president for academic affairs.

"This is an excellent program and we already have seen improvement in those enrolled during the fall," Adair said. "And we have the flexibility to tailor the course work to fit our special needs in this and other Rockwell plants."

As the second largest plant in Rockwell's Automotive Operations, the Winchester facility frequently is tapped for supervisory personnel to be assigned to other plants.

"This program provides a great opportunity for our salaried personnel to better themselves and, by improving their job skills and performances, they become more effective for Rockwell," Adair added. "The company sees this program and others where we pay tuition as excellent investments in the future."

MSU faculty members travel to Winchester to teach classes in the early afternoon and evening. The classes are scheduled just before and after shift changes at the plant. Classrooms are provided by Rockwell.

"This is a splendid example of how we can combine our teaching and public service roles for the direct benefit of many citizens and a major employer," said Dr. Duncan.

But higher education at the Winchester plant is not new for MSU or Rockwell. A master's degree in business administration was launched three years ago and several management personnel have completed the MBA program without taking one class outside the plant.

"This is a good partnership and we are looking forward to a long and pleasant association with Morehead State University," Adair concluded.

MSU's reaction was summarized by Joyce Crouch, instructor of speech, who is younger than most of her students at Rockwell.

"They are highly motivated and determined to relate their classroom work to their jobs. It is a terrific experience for all of us who teach there."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- "It was completely by accident," says Harry Hall of the Tom, Dick and Harry combination of he and his two brothers at Morehead State University.

"I was named after my father," Harry said. "Dick was a favorite name of our parents and Tom was named after one of our uncles."

Though the name combination was unintentional, the Hall brothers did plan their membership in the MSU chapter of Sigma Alpha Epsilon social fraternity.

"We've all been good friends." Harry noted. "Our whole family is close."

"We haven't been kidded a lot about our names," Tom said. "Very few people realize it because they don't know all three of us."

"We were ribbed the most in elementary school," he continued, "That's really the only time, until now, that the three of us have been together in one school."

"Mostly people find it hard to believe," Harry added. "But the kidding doesn't bother us."

The brothers recently were reunited at MSU. Tom, a transfer from the University of Alabama, is a sophomore. Dick is a senior and Harry is a graduate student.

Besides their choice of college and fraternity, the brothers also share an interest in sports. Harry was center fielder on the MSU baseball team for three years. Tom and Dick admit to being baseball fans.

"We also all ski," Tom added.

Considering the size of the Hall family, it is apparent how their name combination could go unnoticed. The brothers are among seven children, five boys and two girls. Harry, 23, is the oldest. Tom, 19, and Dick, 21, are in the middle of the family.

They are graduates of Findlay High School in Findlay, Ohio, where the family lived before moving recently to Alabama.

Their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Hall, Jr., live in Birmingham.

Though they are good friends and like to have fun, according to Tom, there are some things the brothers don't do together. "We live separatley," emphasized Harry, "and my dates are personal."

And not the sort of thing you want to share with just any Tom, Dick and Harry.

Morehead State University is looking for help in designing a new letterhead for official stationery.

President Morris L. Norfleet has announced that design competition open only to MSU students will be conducted this semester.

A committee has been appointed to supervise and judge the contest.

"The design should be imaginative, eye-catching and instantly recognizable," said Dr. Norfleet. "The committee will keep the contest rules as flexible as possible to encourage creativity."

The winning entrant will receive a $100 U.S. Savings Bond and a permanent award to be presented at spring commencement in May. The deadline for entries is April 10 and the winning design will be announced May 1.

The new design will replace the current letterhead which has been in use since 1967. New letterhead will begin appearing after July 1. Existing inventories will be used until depleted.

The contest rules are:

1. The competition is open to any student enrolled at MSU during the spring semester, 1978.
2. Entries must be submitted on 8½ x 11" white paper and will become the property of Morehead State University.
3. The design must incorporate no more than two colors.
4. Originality and distinctive design are the primary criteria.

5. There is no limit to the number of entries submitted per student.
6. The student's name, campus or local address and telephone number must be printed on the reverse side of each entry.
7. The entry deadline is 5 p.m. on April 10, 1978. Entries should be submitted to Division of Public Information, Allie Young Hall.
8. The Letterhead Design committee will review all entries and select the top three, from which President Norfleet will choose the winning design.
9. The committee reserves the right to reject all entries if none are considered sufficiently original and distinctive.
10. The committee reserves the right to make minor changes, if necessary, to the winning entry.

Committee members are Dr. Roger Jones, associate professor of art; Edward Nass, assistant professor of industrial education; Dr. Robert Newton, head of the Department of Industrial Education and Technology; Gene Pyle, assistant professor of art; Franz Altschuler, assistant professor of art; Keith Kappes, director of public information; Martin Huffman, director of printing services; Carole Osborne, art teacher at Bath County High School; Gene Stapperfenne, graphic arts teacher at Boyd County Junior High School; Cathy Bush, Louisville senior; William May, Morehead freshman; Jerald Nickell, West Liberty graduate student; Christie Salow, Flatwoods sophomore.

MOREHEAD, Ky. -- Tom Osborne of Owingsville has been named coordinator of the construction technology program at Morehead State University.

A former industrial arts teacher at Bath County High School, the Rochester, N.Y. native is a two-time graduate of MSU. He is married to the former Carol Mathews of Columbus, Ohio, who is an art teacher at BCHS and also an MSU graduate. They have one child.

"This is a new challenge and I am excited about the prospects of developing a technological program which holds such great promise," said Osborne. "I enjoyed being part of a good school system and especially my association with the fine students in Bath County."

Osborne, who joined the MSU faculty last month, will maintain residence in Owingsville where he is active in several organizations, including the Lions Club and County Recreation Committee.

"We are appreciative of the assistance of the Bath County Board of Education in releasing Tom from his contract so that he could return to the University in this important position," said Dr. Charles M. Derrickson, dean of MSU's School of Applied Sciences and Technology.

Construction technology is among more than 40 associate degree programs at MSU.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University will observe Founders Day on Tuesday, March 7, with a series of programs, including an appearance by former FBI director Clarence Kelley.

MSU President Morris L. Norfleet said the observance was being revived after a lapse of several years to become an annual campus event in March.

"Founders Day provides a unique opportunity for the University to honor its heritage and to point to the future," Dr. Norfleet stated. "Our planning committee has developed a meaningful observance and we invite all friends of the University to join us in celebrating the 56th anniversary of the creation of the institution."

Gov. Edwin Morrow signed the bill on March 8, 1922, which led to the founding of state normal schools at Morehead and Murray. The institutions actually opened their doors in 1923.

Dr. Norfleet announced that John Collis, a member of MSU's administrative staff since 1949, was serving as chairman of the 17-member Founders Day Committee which is comprised of faculty, staff, students, alumni and local citizens.

"This is a special day for Morehead State University and we hope to set a high standard for future observances," said Collis.

Kelley, who retired recently after more than four years as FBI director, will be featured at a 2:30 p.m. public convocation in Wetherby Gymnasium.

Founders Day begins at 7 a.m. with a Prayer Breakfast in the Adron Doran University Center under sponsorship of the Morehead Ministerial Association.

Scheduled at 11:45 a.m. at the University Center is an awards luncheon and the rededication of Allie Young Hall, a former women's residence hall, which has been renovated to house academic and administrative services. A ribbon-cutting ceremony is set for 1:30 p.m.

The luncheon program will include presentation of a major award for service to the University. The recipient will be identified shortly.

Tickets are $3.00 and will be available at the door, the University Business Office, University Center, and the Peoples Bank and Citizens Bank.

A special dinner will begin at 4:15 p.m. at the University Center and continue through 6:30 p.m. No formal program is involved. Tickets are $1.75.

The concluding event will be an 8 p.m. concert in Wetherby Gymnasium by the MSU Symphony Band with Dr. Robert Hawkins conducting.

Other members of the Founders Day Committee are Dr. Mary Northcutt, Dr. Don Miller, George T. Young, Virginia Rice, Sonny Allen, Robert Stokes, Merl Allen, Mayor Crayton Jackson, Rowan County Judge-Executive W. C. Flannery, Sherman Arnett, Billy Joe Hall, Jane Holbrook, Keith Kappes, Greg Loomis, Nevilyn Tackett and Tonya Cozad.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University President Morris L. Norfleet received a vote of confidence here Wednesday in the form of a new, four-year contract.

The pact, which expires June 30, 1982, was approved on a 7-0 vote of the Board of Regents with three members absent.

His current contract, due to expire June 30, 1979, will be discarded and the new agreement will become effective July 1, according to the motion by Regent Jerry Howell of Jackson. The MSU chief executive took office 15 months ago.

"This is the best evaluation we can make of Dr. Norfleet's performance as president," Howell said of the new contract. He added that the salary will be set each year.

Dr. Norfleet said in response:

"This is a great honor and I shall continue to do my best to act in the best interests of the total University."

In other business, the Board:

- Approved a student service and activity fee of $10 per semester beginning this fall.

- Created the "Founders Day Award for University Service" to be presented each year at Founders Day with the first award to be presented Tuesday, March 7, to W. E. Crutcher of Morehead, retired publisher of The Morehead News.

- Authorized "Lady Eagles" as the official nickname of MSU's women's athletic teams.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Former FBI director Clarence Kelley told a Morehead State University Founders Day audience here Tuesday that he would have preferred that his successor come from the ranks of the bureau.

However, Kelley described Judge William Webster, President Carter's choice to replace him, as "an intelligent and fair person who knows the constitution and is able to interpret it."

The veteran law enforcement official said he had "no rancor in his heart toward anyone" as a result of being forced out of the directorship he had held since 1973. Kelley said he had been planning to retire this year and that President Carter and Attorney General Griffin Bell had asked him to stay 45 days longer than he had planned because of the transition to a new director.

Kelley, the FBI's second permanent director in history, said institutions of higher education could help improve relations between young persons and federal investigative agencies by conducting "open and informal discussions."

The former Kansas City police chief said law enforcement agencies have learned to accept criticism, to plan ahead and to have better relations with the press.

Kelley addressed an afternoon convocation as part of MSU's annual Founders Day observance. Earlier, four former basketball All-Americans helped break ground for a new $7.5 million academic-athletic center and retired Morehead publisher W. E. Crutcher received the first Founders Day Award for University Service.

MOREHEAD, Ky.--- How did Dr. John Kleber, a staunch Republican, wind up as editor of the public papers of former Gov. Lawrence Wetherby, an equally staunch Democrat?

Dr. Kleber is a professor of history at Morehead State University and is faculty sponsor of the College Young Republicans.

"Political ties apparently were not considered," the historian says of his selection by the Kentucky Advisory Commission on Public Documents to edit the Wetherby papers.

They will appear as a single volume in the series, "The Public Papers of the Governors of Kentucky," a collection of speeches and other papers of the state's chief executives.

The history professor has been kidded by his students and colleagues about the political angle but he is very happy with the assignment.

"I used to say I had never met a politician I really liked but Gov. Wetherby is the exception," Dr. Kleber said, "He is a fine gentleman."

The project is being financed by the Kentucky General Assembly and has the support of Gov. Julian Carroll. Up to $6,000 will be provided by the state to assist with travel, editing and duplicating costs in the Wetherby project. MSU is supplying additional funds.

Dr. Kleber has experienced problems collecting material because the state had no policy during the Wetherby years designed to preserve a governor's papers.

"Fortunately, Gov. Wetherby saved a great deal of material from his term of office and has been extremely helpful in the project," Dr. Kleber said. "Not only has he provided many public papers but he also has furnished numerous papers of a private nature. In fact, he has opened his home to me and given me an insight into what it was like to be governor during his term."

Wetherby was governor for five years, serving the last year of the term of Gov. Earle Clements who was elected to the U.S. Senate. Wetherby was elected to a full term in 1951.

"I am very pleased to have a part in this project," Dr. Kleber stated. "A public book will be the end product of my efforts. This and other volumes in the series will become important research aids to those who study Kentucky history and it will preserve the important works of former chief executives."

Actual editing of the Wetherby papers began last fall and Dr. Kleber has five years to complete the project. However, he hopes to finish much earlier.

Assisting with the preparation of the papers is Virginia Ritchie, Ashland graduate student at MSU. She currently is researching, indexing and collecting biographical information.

"As a student of history and as a Kentuckian, I couldn't pass up the opportunity to assist in this project," Ms. Ritchie said. "To be part of such a venture is a dream come true for any history major."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Interior design generally is regarded as a woman's career but men are welcome in the program at Morehead State University.

In fact, MSU's Department of Home Economics offers a four-year degree program in interior design which is ideally suited for the male designer, according to Feledra Dixon, assistant professor of home economics.

"Interior design is a discipline with irregular hours and lots of travel and it demands physical endurance, mental agility and great flexibility." "This may not appeal to a woman with a family. However, the market is wide open for women with adequate training, experience and the ability to withstand the pressures and irregular working hours. If so they can succeed as well as their male counterparts."

MSU's program offers instruction in fundamental design, art, textiles, history of furniture, space planning, psychology of decorating and communication skills.

"Our program will provide the student with the essential information and skills necessary to succeed in a competitive job market," Mrs. Dixon said. "Interior design has grown rapidly, especially during the past 10 years, because more people are relying on the services of professional designers."

Additional information on interior design is available from the Department of Home Economics, UPO 889, MSU, Morehead, Ky 40351.

MOREHEAD, KY --- When the experts gather to talk about coal research in Kentucky, one of the prominent names is Dr. David Hylbert of Morehead State University.

The geology professor has been studying roof falls -- the major cause of mining fatalities -- for more than five years under research grants from the U.S. Bureau of Mines. And his work is beginning to show results.

Dr. Hylbert and his student assistants recently received another grant to test the techniques he has developed for identifying potentially hazardous mine sites. At least six Eastern Kentucky mines now in existence or in the planning stages will be his laboratory for the $72,000 project.

The preliminary research was concentrated in the Highsplint and Bailey Creek mines of the Eastover Mining Co. in Harlan County.

In certain cases, Dr. Hylbert has been able to predict the location of weak roof areas but the procedure requires additional study.

"The more work we do in the field, the more accurate we hope to become," Dr. Hylbert said. "But there still can be mistakes because we can never accumulate enough data on which to base the projections."

MSU mine research

His research is intended to help mine engineers make their mines safer.

"We can't tell engineers how to hold up a roof, but we can tell them if a hazardous condition could occur and to be ready for it," the researcher added.

The Hylbert team often works inside mines to make core drillings in mine roofs to study trends in rock types.

The new phase of the research will require about two years and Dr. Hylbert is anxious to get moving. More than a dozen companies have offered use of their mines for the new studies.

"We will move quickly to select those mines we feel are best suited for the project," he added. "The cooperation of the mining companies has been a great asset to our work."

Why would a person devote six years of his life to such a project?

"The idea of making mines safer is the ideal use of the science of geology," he said. "This work could directly benefit underground miners and their families. Our goal is to do something for the good of all."

MOREHEAD, KY --- Morehead State University's Board of Regents Wednesday adopted a record budget of $26.4 million for the 1978-79 fiscal year.

Income for the new budget includes $16.4 million in state appropriations, $3.9 million in tuition and fees and $2.3 million in state and federal grants and contracts.

Major expenditures will be $7.7 million in instructional costs, $8.1 million for academic and institutional support and $2.3 million for student services.

The 1978-79 figure is approximately $2 million higher than the current operating budget.

The Regents adopted a resolution supporting President Morris Norfleet's efforts to have the 20 percent limit on out-of-state students abolished by the Kentucky Council on Higher Education.

Judge James M. Richardson of Owingsville said the limitation is unfair to out-of-state alumni and former Kentuckians who have natural ties to MSU or to the region.

Noting that out-of-state fees have been increased $250 per year since 1976-77, Regent Sam Kibbey of Ashland said the higher costs are reducing the number of out-of-state applicants and that a percentage limitation is no longer necessary.

In other action, the Regents:

Accepted the resignation of Dr. John R. Duncan, vice president for academic affairs, who is returning to full-time teaching. He was commended for his service in the position since 1975.

Approved per semester increases of $15 in room rent and $5 in telephone service for occupants of residence halls.

Authorized the awarding of honorary doctoral degrees during spring commencement on May 12 to industrialist Robert E. Browning of Maysville, radiologist Dr. Owings W. Kincaid of Rochester, Minn., and author James Still of Hindman.

Merged the Division of Institutional Services and the Bureau of Research and Development to form the Bureau of University and Regional Services. Philip W. Conn, currently the vice president for research and development, will head the new unit. President Norfleet said the restructuring would improve the University's ability to provide public services.

Approved classification systems for administrative staff members and clerical and secretarial personnel.

Okayed establishment of a credit union for full-time employees.

Dropped gymnastics as an intercollegiate sport and encouraged its continuance on a club basis.

Transferred three academic departments to new areas including the Department of Library Science and Instructional Media to Johnson Camden Library, Personal Development Institute to the School of Humanities and the Department of Military Science to the Authorized detailed planning for the creation of an athletic foundation to utilize external funds for support of intercollegiate athletics.

Other board members attending were Lloyd Cassity of Ashland, Jerry Howell of Jackson, Dr. Daniel Stamper of Pikeville, Dr. W.H. Cartmell of Maysville, Dr. Charles Pelfrey of the faculty and Evan Perkins of the student body.

MOREHEAD, KY --- Dr. William F. Moore, head of the Department of Agriculture at Morehead State University, will have a firsthand look at agriculture in Europe and the Soviet Union this summer.

He is leading a delegation of 25 Americans overseas to study European agriculture techniques and procedures. The group will meet with producers, researchers, government officials, representatives of agriculture services and the U.S. embassies.

They will learn European ideas on agriculture production through group meetings, farm and producer visitations, seminars and meetings with individuals and ministers of agriculture.

"A good deal of our visits and study will involve individual farms," Dr. Moore said. "We will take a look at the way things are done in many areas, including animal production, irrigation and crop production."

The trip is being arranged by the People-to-People Citizens Ambassador Program, a private program created by President Dwight Eisenhower in 1956.

"A major purpose of the trip, in addition to the agriculture study, will be to promote goodwill and understanding between the U.S. and other countries," Dr. Moore added.

Visits are scheduled to the Soviet Union, Finland, France, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium and Denmark.

MOREHEAD, KY --- The presidency of Morehead State University's Student Government Association is a prestigious and demanding job.

But the new president, Kevin Porter, Bricktown, N.J. iunior, welcomes the challenge and obviously is prepared for it.

Porter was elected by his fellow students last month. Since then, he has been busy preparing programs for the coming year.

"It is important to get this organization off to a fast start," he said. "We will have legislation ready for action at the first Congress meeting of the fall semester."

Involvement in student government is not new to Porter. He has been a member of the SGA for three years, served on various committees and chaired the Legislative Action, Scholarship and Traffic committees.

During his sophomore year, he was treasurer of the executive committee and feels he gained "valuable experience" working with MSU faculty, staff and administrators, on the Student Life Committee. He also is a two-term member of the University Senate.

The new student leader is concerned with the SGA's image and foresees a year of hard work but is optimistic.

"My job will be to develop and work with the Student Congress to see that a comprehensive program for the SGA is approved and carried out," Porter says.

MOREHEAD, KY --- Maysville industrialist Robert E. Browning told Morehead State University's spring commencement audience here Friday that a casual performance is not the way to success.

The industrial manager told more than 1,000 degree candidates to "believe in yourself and your goals, pay attention to details regardless of the career you pursue and stay abreast of developments in your chosen field" because "when you stop learning, you stop growing."

MSU President Morris Norfleet presented the President's Cup for Achievement to Bobby Jones, senior from Lexington and MSU's first track All-American, and the President's Cup for Leadership to Evan Perkins, junior from West Liberty and student representative on the MSU Board of Regents.

Honorary degrees were awarded to Browning, Dr. Owings W. Kincaid of Rochester, Minn., and author James Still of Hindman.

Special recognition was given to Patrick Watts of Morehead for his perfect 4.0 grade point average; 75-year Russell Peterson of Portsmouth, Ohio, the oldest member of the graduating class; and Dr. Charles Whidden, professor of physics, recipient of the 1977-78 Distinguished Faculty Award.

The industrial manager told more than 1,000 degree candidates to "believe in yourself and your goals, pay attention to details regardless of the career you pursue and stay abreast of developments in your chosen field" because "when you stop learning, you stop growing."

In outlining personal attributes he deems beneficial to the future, Browning told the graduates to "seek responsibilities consistent with your capabilities."

He added, "You must never lose sight of the fact that people are the most valuable resource of any organization. I have seen a great many people who should have succeeded be tripped up by their inability to deal with people."

Browning also said to "be honest with yourself. Being honest is not confined to your association with others. The greatest challenge is to be honest with ourselves and honesty is the best policy."

MSU President Morris Norfleet presented the President's Cup for Achievement to Bobby Jones, senior from Lexington and MSU's first track All-American. Jones earned All-America honors at the National Indoor Track Championships of the NCAA.

President Norfleet also presented the President's Cup for Leadership to Evan Perkins, junior from West Liberty and student representative on the MSU Board of Regents. Perkins was described as an individual who "spent endless hours working for the betterment of MSU."

The workshops cover all aspects of communications. They carry one to three semester hours of graduate or undergraduate credit.

Kentucky resident undergraduate fees are $20 per semester hour. In-state graduates pay $31 per semester hour. Out-of-state tuition is $50 per semester hour for undergraduates and $78 per semester hour for graduates.

Joyce Crouch, instructor of speech at MSU, is coordinating the workshops. Individual faculty members within the Department of Communications are teaching the workshop.

Currently under way is a workshop for McDonald's restaurants in the Northeastern Kentucky area.

"McDonald's management told us that of all the McDonald's located in college towns throughout the country, only MSU offers such a program," said Ms. Crouch. "Our workshops have gone over quite well and we are pleased with the results."

Another workshop is scheduled March 22-April 26 for teachers in the Rowan County Schools.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Since the movie, "Those Magnificent Men In Their Flying Machines", Chuck Donaldson's interest has grown in flying and, by the end of this summer, he plans to soar over the countryside on his own set of wings.

"I have been interested in flying for several years and in hang gliding since it began," says the Morehead State University senior from Portsmouth, Ohio.

He began four years ago to build a hang glider with a 32-foot wing span and now finally has its completion within reach.

After several starts and stops, construction resumed last fall in MSU's Lappin Hall when Donaldson used his "Icarus V" glider plans as a part of a special project in a physics class.

Donaldson says he decided to build this particular model after reading about it in a magazine several years ago. He said he bought the plans for $12.00 for what was, in his words, "the most sophisticated hang glider of its day."

More and more hang gliders are being seen around cliffs in different sections of the country as the sport continues to grow.

"A lot of people getting into the sport want to get started as soon as they can," he said. "So they go out and buy some sort of kit and put the glider together and they're ready. That's the difference in my glider because I have only the plans and have to build it myself. This takes a lot of time which most people don't want to spend."

An experienced glider flyer and parachutist, Donaldson plans to foot launch his 62-pound aluminum-framed craft along the Licking River because "high performance gliders like the Icarus V don't need the high cliffs many of the others do."

After parachuting and fixed-wing flying, he prefers hang gliding.

"It's like you are really flying," Donaldson says. "You can float and soar like the birds."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University is entering into a unique partnership with Eastern Kentucky and Appalachia with the development of an Appalachian Development Center.

Through this center, MSU will continue to offer supportive services to the region while using regional resources in educational capacities.

According to MSU Vice President for University and Regional Services Philip W. Conn, "MSU is committed to Appalachia, Ky., to provide cooperative ventures and supportive services and the ADC is the manifestation of that commitment."

The ADC will work hand-in-hand with the region, serving as a center for Appalachian development and coordinating related activities. "This is consistent with the Council on Higher Education's mission statement for MSU," Conn said. "We are designated a regional university, committed to develop programs to enhance the economic growth of Appalachia and provide applied research and continuing education programs."

One of ADC's primary objectives is to help supply the manpower needs of the region. According to Conn, "We are working with regional businessmen to meet the manpower demands through the development of several specialized programs including mining and construction technology, Masters of Business Administration, and several specialized projects such as the Employability Skills Project."

With the cooperation of area businessmen, the Office of Field Career Experiences has increased the number of student field training

opportunities. "This program serves a dual purpose," Conn said. "It provides the student with valuable on-the-job training and also helps the local businessman meet his manpower needs. As a result of this partnership, the student is better prepared to find employment and serve this region."

Through the ADC, MSU hopes to establish a series of conferences dealing with Appalachian issues. "Morehead is situated in the heart of Appalachia, Ky.," Conn said. "It is only natural that we serve as a center for workshops, seminars and conferences relating to the region." One such event, the Appalachian Development Conference, is scheduled at MSU June 19-21.

Industrial development of the region is another concern of ADC. MSU has hosted several delegations of both U.S. and foreign industrialists looking for potential plant sites.

Acquisition of materials and establishment of an extensive reference library on Appalachian subjects and issues are major goals of ADC. A section in the new Carroll Library Tower addition of Johnson Camden Library will house volumes and materials of the Appalachian Division.

Appalachian research, another area of interest, is nothing new to MSU faculty members. Dr. David Hylbert of the geology department has studied roof falls in coal mines for several years and is recognized as one of the leading experts on the subject. Dr. Henry Chang recently completed a study of children of deceased and disabled coal miners, and Dr. William Falls and Dr. John Fryman surveyed the need of Appalachian children in the sciences and mathematics. The ADC will continue to encourage and support research relating to the traditions and needs of the region.

MSU presently offers several courses dealing with Appalachian subjects, including Appalachian History, Appalachian Geography, Appalachian Sociology and Appalachian Folk Culture. The ADC hopes to develop additional subjects and an exchange program, with professionals from various Appalachian service programs teaching the classes. MSU faculty members will assume temporary duties with the various organizations.

With the cooperation of the local school system, a continuing educational program in consumer education is being offered for the first time. This and similar programs are designed to provide useful information to the public, utilizing resources from the community and MSU.

MOREHEAD, Ky.--- Histoplasmosis, a disease harmful to humans, is the subject of an extensive research project by students at Morehead State University.

Caused by a common fungus, "histoplasma capsulatum," the organism has been found in the bird roosts of Kentucky.

Eleven MSU students, under a grant of $20,450 from the National Science Foundation, organized a project to determine if the Kentucky roosts were a source of the disease.

Under the direction of Cathy Stevens of Russell, the students took 423 samples at 16 bird roosts in Western, Central and Eastern Kentucky. Five of the sites were determined culturally positive for the fungus.

"Working on this project gave all of us a broad spectrum of experience," Ms. Stevens stated. "Our results have been promising and this project has introduced us to the time-consuming tasks involved in the initiation and fulfillment of research."

Following that investigation, MSU received a grant of $23,000 from the Kentucky Department for Human Resources for the students to study 12 more roosts this spring and summer.

And a third effort, 24 additional roosts at a cost of $38,000, is in the planning stages. If approved by the state, it would start later this summer.

Histoplasmosis

Working closely with state mycology officials at Paris, the student researchers are attempting to identify roosts which pose potential health hazards.

Dr. Ted Pass, associate professor of biology at MSU and project advisor, believes the greatest danger of the positive sites is that they may be disturbed.

"It is extremely dangerous to disturb positive areas of the fungus during hot, dry periods," he stated. "More spores can be released and people who work in those areas can be affected."

Dr. Pass added there are about 45 to 50 major bird roosts known in Kentucky. Nineteen have been tested and eight were found to be positive.

Findings in the first phase of the project were reported to the National Science Foundation in a formal paper presented by Cathy Stevens and junior Susan K. Kiser of Cleveland, Ohio, during a national conference.

"A great deal of attention is being given histoplasmosis in Kentucky and this project certainly is an important part of that research," Dr. Pass concluded.

The 19-member council represents 49 Appalachian counties and will be an advisory group to the Secretary of Development and the Governor's Economic Development Commission.

Gov. Carroll also announced the establishment of a state-wide emergency communications network, the Kentucky Early Warning System (KEWS).

"We have America's first state-wide communications system under construction and hope to have it in effect with the state police within the next 15 to 18 months," said Gov. Carroll.

In response to recommendations from the conference's four task forces, Gov. Carroll said that the state was trying to get Kentuckians to think more of themselves through a major public relations effort and multi-media campaign.

He added, "we must believe in ourselves because we can't build a strong economy or a strong educational system until we do."

Today's activities capped the three-day Governor's conference which included addresses by state and federal agency representatives.

MOREHEAD, KY --- Official opening of the Appalachian Development Center at Morehead State University and appointment of a 19-member Appalachian Development Council highlighted the three-day Governor's Appalachian Development Conference at MSU.

MSU President Morris L. Norfleet told more than 500 conference participants that the University's efforts through its Appalachian Development Center will include continuing education, assistance to local governmental units, technical and manpower training opportunities, scientific and economic research, a variety of social service programs and promotion of tourism and industrial development.

Gov. Julian Carroll appointed Ashland banker G.B. Johnson to head the Appalachian Development Council which was created on the final day of the conference. The council represents 49 Appalachian counties in Kentucky and will be an advisory group for the Secretary of Development and the Governor's Economic Development Commission.

William E. Albers, alternate federal co-chairman of the Appalachian Regional Commission, discussed coal, noting the current boom has shown that many young miners are coming into the mines without any experience, creating what he termed a "generation gap" in the coal industry.

State Commerce Commissioner Terry McBrayer told the delegates that Appalachian Kentucky must plan now if its economy is to survive after the coal is gone.

"In the future, we must insure that, with or without coal, Eastern Kentucky has a stable, secure and self-sustaining economy," McBrayer said.

He added that the region should make wiser use of its severance tax revenues to provide for diversified industry in the future.

Dr. Alex Mercure, assistant secretary for rural development in the U.S. Department of Agriculture, discussed rural development and emphasized the need for improved housing.

"Maybe our urban communities are starting to depend on the rural areas for the solution to their own problems," Mercure said. "Many urban residents are finding the rural areas attractive, especially in the style of life they find there."

Four task forces compiled dozens of recommendations and submitted them to the governor who said each proposal would be analyzed as soon as possible. Carroll said the ADC operation at MSU, new regional state offices at Prestonsburg and London, and the new Appalachian Development Council would be state government's main thrusts in the development of Appalachian Kentucky.

The conference was co-sponsored by the Kentucky Development Cabinet and the Governor's Economic Development Commission.

MOREHEAD, KY --- A Rowan County coroner's jury ruled justifiable homicide here Thursday in the June 4 shooting death of a former Morehead State University student.

The jury also found that MSU Security Officer Michael Stevens fired the fatal shot which struck Gregory A. Williams, 23, of Louisville, in the chest.

Williams, who had escaped from the Bath County Jail the night before, was shot at a police roadblock in Morehead. He had been jailed three weeks earlier on a rape charge.

Kentucky State Police detectives introduced ballistics evidence which identified Stevens as the officer whose shot actually struck Williams. The KSP said Morehead City Patrolman Ronald Farley also fired but that his bullet glanced off of the windshield of the Williams car.

MOREHEAD, KY --- Morehead State University "is hopeful that monies will be allocated" for the renovation of Mays Hall to house the newly formed Appalachian Development Center.

Philip Conn, vice president for university and regional services said that the University is "still waiting" on the start of renovation.

Mays Hall, a former men's dormitory, will house the ADC. Already in operation in the building is the "Employability Skills Project," which is designed to help Eastern Kentuckians choose, find, get and keep a job of their choice.

"We feel that the tremendous success of the Governor's Conference on Appalachian Development in Kentucky demonstrates businessmen, government officials, and educators are enthusiastic about joining forces in the interest of economic development," Conn said.

"The conference came at a very timely point in the development of the center, because we can now see the established interest in the region and the coordinated efforts by all to help make the ADC a success," Conn added.

MSU has been a key resource in the development of programs aimed to enhance economic growth.

As of July 1, MSU will receive $266,000 in state funds for the first year of operating the Appalachian Development Center.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University's newest regional service is the employability skills project, designed to help Kentuckians choose, find, get and keep a job of their choice.

This is the first program of MSU's Appalachian Development Center.

"Our students like using the material because of its diversity and practical application to everyday situations," said instructor Kay Freeland.

"For example, they learn how to fill out a job application and best prepare themselves for a job interview," she added.

Video-taped sessions are also used to show students the progress they've made and how to prepare for a job interview or correctly fill out an application.

The program involves a teaching process that begins with "who am I and where do I go," and continues through "keeping my job - habits that help."

The classes are composed of 10-25 persons and meet twice weekly. The total instruction requires about 120 hours, but each unit can be offered separately as needed by a special group.

"Our goal is to make our people more competitive in today's job market," said Gary Wilson, project coordinator and one of three instructors.

Essentially, the program teaches individuals to use various sources of job information, plan personal and vocational goals, effectively present themselves to prospective employers and develop good work habits.

Since its beginning last fall under a grant from the U.S. Office of Education, the employability skills project has enrolled more than 170 students at 10 locations including Morehead, Mt. Sterling, Ashland, Lexington, Louisville and Beattyville.

"Our preliminary findings indicate that 97 percent of the persons enrolled feel they benefited from the instruction and that they would recommend the program to others," said Mrs. Freeland.

MOREHEAD, KY --- Morehead State University is entering into a unique partnership with Eastern Kentucky and Appalachia with the development of an Appalachian Development Center.

Through this center, MSU will continue to offer supportive services to the region while using regional resources in educational capacities.

According to MSU Vice President for University and Regional Services Philip W. Conn, "MSU is committed to Appalachia, KY., to provide cooperative ventures and supportive services and the ADC is the manifestation of that committment."

The ADC will work hand-in-hand with the region, serving as a center for Appalachian development and coordination related activities. "This is consistant with the Council on Higher Education's mission statement for MSU." Conn said. "We are designated a regional university, committed to develop programs to enhance the economic growth of Appalachia and provide applied research and continuing education programs."

One of ADC's primary objectives is to help supply the manpower needs of the region. According to Conn, "We are working with regional businessmen to meet the manpower demands through the development of several specialized programs including mining and construction technology Masters of Business Administration, and several specialized projects such as the Employability Skills Project."

With the cooperation of area businessmen, the Office of Field Career Experiences has increased the number of student field training

opportunities. "This program serves a dual purpose," Conn said. "It provides the student with valuable on-the-job training and also helps the local businessman meet his manpower needs. As a result of this partnership, the student is better prepared to find employment and serve this region."

Through the ADC, MSU hopes to establish a series of conferences dealing with Appalachian issues. "Morehead is situated in the heart of Appalachia, KY.," Conn said. "It is only natural that we serve as a center for workshops, seminars and conferences relating to the region." One such event, the Appalachian Development Conference, is scheduled at MSU June 19-21.

Industrial development of the region is another concern of ADC. MSU has hosted several delegations of both U.S. and foreign industrialists looking for potential plant sites.

Acquisition of materials and establishment of an extensive reference library on Appalachian subjects and issues are major goals of ADC. A section in the new Carroll Library Tower addition of Johnson Camden Library will house volumes and materials of the Appalachian Division.

Appalachian research another area of interest, is nothing new to MSU faculty members. Dr. David Hylbert of the geology department has studied roof falls in coal mines for several years and is recognized as one of the leading experts on the subject. Dr. Henry Chang recently completed a study of children of deceased and disabled coal miners, and Dr. William Falls and Dr. John Fryman surveyed the need of Appalachian children in the sciences and mathematics. The ADC will continue to encourage and support research relating to the traditions and needs of the region.

MSU presently offers several courses dealing with Appalachian subjects, including Appalachian History, Appalachian Geography, Appalachian Sociology and Appalachian Folk Culture. The ADC hopes to develop additional subjects and, through an exchange program, with professionals from various Appalachian service programs teaching the classes and MSU faculty members will have temporary duties with the various organizations.

With the cooperation of the local school system, a continuing educational program in consumer education is being offered for the first time. This and similar programs are designed to provide useful information to the public, utilizing resources from the community and MSU.
