MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University's Appalachian Development Center has recently published the first issue of the ADC's Monograph Series.

"This is to introduce the first in what we expect to be a long series of informative monographs on the Appalachian Region of Kentucky," said MSU President Morris L. Norfleet.

Dr. Raymond S. Ferrell, coordinator of regional research at the ADC, says the series "provides a forum for creative and scholarly works concerned with the cultural, environmental and economic problems of the Appalachian Region."

The publication, "An Analysis of Population Changes in Eastern Kentucky 1970-2000" and authored by Dr. Gary Cox, head of MSU's Department of Geography, focuses on recent and projected population changes in Eastern Kentucky.

"Since the beginning of the 20th Century, the economy of the region has been tied to one product, coal, which has led the region through a series of spectacular booms and heartbreaking busts," stated Cox. "While the present world energy situation appears to have contributed a measure of stability to the coal industry and indirectly to the region, coal remains a highly volatile factor in the future of Eastern Kentucky."

Monograph series

He continued:

"Any one of several variables could alter the demand for Eastern Kentucky coal and would be reflected quickly in population statistics in Eastern Kentucky. These factors should be kept in mind when using population estimates for this region."

Ferrell said the monograph series contains a variety of manuscripts including bibliographies, position papers and research studies. Analyses of regional conditions will also be considered for publication.

"All contributions which address these concerns and are regional in scope will be considered by the editorial review board," Ferrell added.

The monographs are free and available immediately.

Contributions and correspondence should be directed to the editor, Appalachian Development Center Monograph Series, Morehead State University, Morehead, KY 40351 or call 606/783-4731.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Gary G. Messer, director of safety and security at Morehead State University, would like to see more student involvement in the department.

The 31-year-old Morehead native is currently working with the MSU administration to establish a student workshop program in the area of safety and security.

"A majority of other Kentucky schools have a program like this," stated Messer. "Students work with on-duty patrolmen at sporting events, maintaining traffic and parking regulations and in other areas."

Messer, at MSU since 1972 after two years with the Kentucky State Police, says he does not see many major changes being made in the department in the near future.

"We're working hard on the crime prevention program that was started last year," he stated. "It has been very effective in the dorms where there has been good participation."

Messer says the department is basically a peace force and not a crime force and adds that the department concentrates on making sure that safety and order are maintained on campus.

The new director says he is proud of the fact that all the officers in the department have had special education in police training.

"I think education is very important for the officers, especially when they are working at the university level," he said.

"I also think it's time we changed the image of patrolmen so that there is more respect in the relationship between the students and the officers."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- "Coal is almost certain to become increasingly important to Kentucky and the nation in the near future," says Forrest Cameron of Morehead State University.

Cameron, coordinator of MSU's mining technology program, bases this on the current "turmoil over the energy situation" of the nation and the economy.

"Kentucky is the nation's leading coal producing state and the Morehead service area is the state's leading underground coal producing region," adds Cameron. "If MSU is to adequately serve the region, it makes sense to serve the coal industry through education and research."

The mining technology program at MSU began in 1973 and has consistently grown, offering courses on the economic, environmental, legal, technological and sociological aspects of mining.

Students also receive practical, on-the-job training as summer interns with local coal companies.

"We try to teach our students to interact and communicate within the many facets of the coal industry," said Cameron. "We also try to give them the exposure and instruction necessary for coal management positions in private industry, government or labor."

According to Cameron, a primary concern of the program is to give the students a working knowledge of the ever-changing mine laws and regulations.

"We work with agencies such as MSHA (Mine Safety and Health Administration) and the Kentucky Department of Mines and Minerals to keep abreast of the many regulations facing the coal industry," he said.

Cameron, former administrator of the mining technology program at Pikeville College before coming to MSU, says that often the success or failure of many mines depends upon the ability of the coal companies to mine coal profitably and still comply with the laws.

Students in the program are also made aware of the social implications involved with the coal mining industry.

"Mining is more than just digging coal," says Cameron. "You can't just dig the coal and forget about the people and their communities. Our students must be aware of the sociological and environmental aspects as well."

He added that reclamation is now a very important part of the mining cycle.

"We try to get students into the program who are interested in all the various aspects of mining and I think we have succeeded," he said, adding that the program has experienced very good response from employers in the industry.

There are 92 students majoring in mining technology at MSU with more than 100 taking courses in the program, which is part of the School of Applied Sciences and Technology.

Cameron says he expects the program to double in the next year because "coal is the backbone of the Eastern Kentucky region and we are here to serve that region."

Several companies have become involved with the program. Ashland Oil, Inc., recently donated funds toward the construction of an on-campus coal mining technology laboratory and the Eastover Mining Company has donated a continuous mining machine.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- It was an invasion of "strange, white men who dressed in metal and rode animals as big as buffaloes."

Beginning with the 16th century Spanish explorers, Dr. James Gifford of Morehead State University describes life among the Appalachian mountain pioneers in a recently published book.

The publication, "Our Mountain Heritage," is the result of seven public lectures during the summer of 1978 presented to more than 1,100 people in southwestern North Carolina by contributing authors Gifford, Dr. James Horton and Dr. Theda Perdue of Western Carolina University.

"The public lectures were attended by people of all ages," said Gifford. "There were usually several tourists at each lecture which was encouraging because it enabled the visitors to learn more about the area and it probably made their stay more enjoyable."

The book concentrates on western North Carolina and examines the Appalachian experience in a chronological order up to the Civil War. Gifford foresees a follow-up publication from the Civil War to the present.

Gifford's contribution, entitled "Our Pioneer Heritage," begins with the Spanish explorers in the 16th century and their visit to North Carolina in search of gold and other precious metals.

The section then discusses the English explorers, arrival of settlers, mid-18th century conflicts, western North Carolina and the war for independence, the Civil War, slavery and the mountain life.

Gifford book
2-2-2-2-2-2

"Books like this are very important, because there aren't any definitive studies of the Appalachian experience," added Gifford.

He says the book is aimed at the general public readership who is interested in the Appalachian experience but really doesn't know a great deal about it.

The material has been compiled and edited into book form by Clifford R. Lovin and published by the North Carolina Humanities Committee and Mountain Heritage Center of Western Carolina University.

The book, recently presented to MSU's Appalachian Collections, is being distributed by the Mountain Heritage Center and WCU to individuals attending the lectures and to North Carolina schoolchildren.

Gifford is currently presenting a similar project on Kentucky with the assistance of Dr. Don Flatt, head of MSU's Department of History.

"I hope that during the next few years I can develop a similar study of Appalachian Kentucky," Gifford added.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Summer is usually thought of as the time to get outdoors or at least out of the kitchen.

This is not the case for three Morehead State University dietetics students who are spending 15 weeks working in area hospitals.

The students are participating in a General Dietetics Program funded by AHES (Area Health Education Systems) gaining experience in the skills as well as the clinical aspects of dietetics.

Polly Harris, Portsmouth, Ohio senior, working in Louisa Community Hospital says, "The students do everything from scrubbing pots and pans to giving diet instruction to patients."

Other duties include menu preparation, working with therapeutic diet patients and working in all dietary departments of the hospital kitchen.

Lora Nickels Gray, a May graduate of MSU from Mt. Clemens, Mich., is working at Hayswood Hospital in Maysville and objects to the concept she feels many people have about dieticians.

"People usually picture us in the kitchen with a frilly apron on whipping up a cake or something," she said. "There's a lot more to becoming a registered dietician than that."

"Each student lives in the community where she is working and gets to know and understand the people and their health problems," says Cathy Peterjohn, R.D., instructor of nutrition at MSU and on-campus supervisor of the students.

"There is a great need for dietetics, especially in Appalachia," she added. "This summer program is designed to give the students experience in all aspects of working in a health program in a rural community and encourage them to come back to a rural area to practice."

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- A 41-year-old workman was killed early Tuesday in a fall at a construction site on the Morehead State University campus.

Burt Hurley of Knoxville, Tenn., an ironworker with North Florida Erection Co. of Jacksonville, apparently slipped and fell about 30 feet onto a steel beam, according to Project Supt. Joe Pate of Tucker-Lueder and Associates, the general contractor on MSU's Academic-Athletic Center.

Rowan County Coroner James C. Barker said death was attributed to massive internal injuries. The accident occurred at about 7:40 a.m.

North Florida Erection Co., a subcontractor, is erecting structural steel on the $7 million project at the east end of the MSU campus. Work was halted for the day, according to Pate.

Hurley had been working at the site since April. Funeral arrangements are incomplete.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- U.S. Sen. Walter (Dee) Huddleston told more than 500 Morehead State University summer degree candidates here Friday to work for changes.

"If you do not like the way government and institutions are performing, it is your right and even responsibility to work for changes," he said. "But, if you do not succeed on every occasion, that is no reason to give up and quit."

Kentucky's senior senator also told the candidates that "if the system turns you off, change it, don't get cynical. If you fail the first time, try again even harder."

He added that meaning and goals in life require self-evaluation, honesty with yourself and the development of a personal sense of values.

"Life isn't always easy," he said. "But, you do have the freedom, the education and I hope the personal initiative to make of it what you will."

"Nobody wins 100 per cent of the time and even when you win, it may not be 100 per cent of what you sought."

He also said the development of one-issue groups in the nation today presents some serious questions about the future of our democratic political process and needs to be observed very carefully.

"I would hope that most citizens would take a broader perspective in evaluating what is being accomplished by the government and by their representatives than by one single issue," he concluded.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University President Morris L. Norfleet told the institution's Board of Regents here Friday that it is "vital to the future of the University" that faculty and staff salaries be the top priority in the 1980-82 biennial budget.

"An institution of higher education is only as good as its faculty and we must regain a competitive position in the area of compensation," he said. "Continuation budgets in the face of inflation have seriously eroded the University's salary structure in recent years."

The Regents voted unanimously to direct MSU's administrative staff to prepare the 1980-82 budget request with faculty and staff salaries as the highest priority.

In other action, the board:

- * Authorized the structuring of existing courses as an Appalachian Studies Program, including credit and non-credit learning opportunities, concerts, lectures and conferences.

- * Approved a policy statement on salary adjustments for administrators who return to teaching.

- * Instructed the Director of Fiscal Affairs to take "whatever legal procedures necessary" to collect overdue debts.

- * Granted a request from the School of Sciences and Mathematics to establish a water testing laboratory to serve private citizens, public water works and health departments in Eastern Kentucky.

- * Okayed an expanded open house schedule for students living in campus residence halls.

* Dropped library science as a separate program of study when students currently enrolled leave the University.

* Changed the name of the Trio Center to Counseling Center.

* Approved several personnel appointments, including Dr. Michael Davis as Dean of the School of Education, Gene Ranvier as Registrar, Dan Cornett as Associate Registrar, Doris McDowell as Head of the Department of Allied Health Sciences, Dr. Bernard Davis as Interim Director of the Appalachian Development Center and Dr. Charles Pelfrey as Acting Head of the Department of Languages and Literature.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Sibyl Clark has been named community recreation specialist with the Appalachian Development Center at Morehead State University.

A native of England, Ms. Clark will be responsible for community recreational activities which relate to traditional dances, stories and games in the Appalachian region.

"I want to encourage the practice of dancing and dance within the communities of the Appalachian region," she said. "I want the dances to be encouraging to all ages, especially the youth."

"Many times the youth are shy and afraid to participate," she added. "My program encourages participation rather than making the event a spectator sport."

Ms. Clark recently returned from England where she received a gold badge, the highest award presented by the English Folk Dance and Song Society.

Prior to coming to MSU she was a dance specialist with Project DANCE (Dance Activity for New Community Encounter) sponsored by Berea College, the Kentucky Arts Commission and the National Endowment for the Arts.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University has recently received five original works of art by the late Reginald Marsh.

The pieces valued at more than $28,000, were donated to the University by the artist's estate.

Dr. Bill Booth, head of the Department of Art at MSU, said since 1970 three exhibits on the MSU campus have included some of Marsh's works.

"I think Morehead State is very fortunate to receive these works," Booth added. "We are the only institution in Kentucky to receive works from his collection."

He continued:

"Because Morehead State expressed an interest in Marsh's works through exhibitions in the past, I feel this was an important factor in being named among the beneficiaries of the more than 90 pieces of art."

The New York artist is best known for his works featuring Coney Island scenes.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University's 1980-82 biennial budget request totals $46.7 million, a 41 percent increase over the current biennium support of $33 million.

MSU President Morris L. Norfleet told a campus press conference that the largest dollar category is faculty and staff salaries where MSU is seeking $4.9 million over the two-year period.

In addition to yearly salary increases of 9.5 percent, MSU also is requesting additional money for "catch up" funding to make average salaries equal to those at similar institutions in adjoining states.

Dr. Norfleet described salaries as the "No. 1 priority" in the budget request. Among other areas where funding increases are being sought are operating costs, expansion of the Appalachian Development Center, student financial aid, instructional equipment and developmental studies.

"Our budget request will be subjected to a series of hearings before a final figure is sent to the General Assembly early next year by the governor," Dr. Norfleet said. "We feel the request is reasonable and that it is necessary to maintain the University's viability."

Dr. Norfleet made several announcements, including:

* Seven executives from Ashland Oil, Inc. are serving as part-time visiting professors this semester through an "executives in residence" program funded by the energy firm.

* Milton Wright of the Morehead Clinic has been appointed director of MSU's Caudill Health Clinic, succeeding Mrs. Wilma Caudill who retired last month after 20 years. Wright, a physician's assistant, will be paid jointly by MSU and the Morehead Clinic which has a contract to provide professional medical services for MSU students.

* Three field specialists are being employed to expand MSU's cooperative education program which places students in "on-the-job" learning situations. Funded by a federal grant, the new staff members will be assigned to work in the Fivco, Gateway and Buffalo Trace area development districts. The University's goal is to place 300 students in cooperative education positions this year, Dr. Norfleet said.

* A water color painting by Doug Adams, associate professor of art, of the Jesse Stuart homestead in Greenup County will be reproduced and sold to raise funds for the MSU Foundation. Prints are expected to go on sale in mid-October.

* Funding of special programs and projects by external agencies topped the $2 million mark at MSU in the fiscal year which ended June 30. Dr. Norfleet commended Carole C. Morella, director of grants and contracts, and others who were involved in the submission of more than 150 funding proposals to federal, state and private sources.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University's 1980-82 biennial budget request totals $46.7 million, a 41 percent increase over the current biennium support of $33 million.

MSU President Morris L. Norfleet identified the largest new dollar category as faculty and staff salaries where MSU is seeking $4.9 million over the two-year period.

In addition to yearly salary increases of 9.5 percent, MSU also is requesting additional money for "catch up" funding to make average salaries equal to those at similar institutions in adjoining states.

Dr. Norfleet described salaries as the "No. 1 priority" in the budget request. Among other areas where funding increases are being sought are operating costs, expansion of the Appalachian Development Center, student financial aid, instructional equipment and developmental studies.

"Our budget request will be subjected to a series of hearings before a final figure is sent to the General Assembly early next year by the governor," Dr. Norfleet said. "We feel the request is reasonable and that it is necessary to maintain the University's viability."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Hog killing, molasses making and "Blind Tiger."

These are a few subjects which Doug Adams, associate professor of art at Morehead State University, has included in a series of paintings focusing on the Appalachian culture of Eastern Kentucky.

"I am trying to capture the character of Eastern Kentucky, its people, job activities and kinds of activities the people are involved in on a day-to-day basis," said Adams.

He expects to include a minimum of 20 paintings in the series which will be part of a touring art exhibit when completed.

"Some of the subjects I want to paint, such as hog killing and molasses making are seasonal and so this project will take several months to finish," he added. "I want to include each season of Eastern Kentucky and paint the subjects as naturally as I can find them."

Adams is working from more than 250 photographs, sketches made on location and booklets which list various historical sites in Kentucky.

Some of his subjects include "Old Joe Clark's Home" in Clay County, Jesse Stuart's home, a swinging bridge across the Licking River in Magoffin County and one entitled "Blind Tiger" (unlicensed saloon), based on an old house in Clay County.

His efforts in developing water color art were recognized by MSU's Board of Regents last spring when the Department of Art was designated a "Center of Excellence" to receive special budget consideration during the 1979-80 school year.

After traveling up and down the Ohio River from West Virginia to Augusta, Adams says he has enough subject ideas "to paint for a long time."

He plans to display several paintings during MSU's Homecoming Weekend, Oct. 12 and 13.

"I'm trying to express as many facets of Eastern Kentucky's cultural past as possible and also reflect the mining interest which will move Kentucky into the 20th Century," added Adams.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Almost two years after fire destroyed Morehead State University's main horse barn, MSU is ready to open its replacement facility.

President Morris L. Norfleet and District Judge James M. Richardson of Owingsville, a member of the Board of Regents, will be featured at the opening ceremonies.

An "open house" for the $174,000 structure is scheduled Saturday, Sept. 22, from 5 p.m. until 9 p.m. at the University's Derrickson Agricultural Complex on Ky. 377. MSU students will present horsemanship demonstrations.

Construction on the 30-stall barn and an adjacent horse walker began in April and was completed recently. The project was financed with insurance proceeds and a grant from Gov. Julian Carroll. Harold Bruner Building Supply of Flemingsburg was the general contractor.

The horse walker features four wash areas, rest rooms, utility room, an office and the walk area.

The new barn is constructed of oak, treated with fire resistant paint and equipped with a fire alarm system. It was erected on the site of the original barn, adjacent to the Richardson Livestock Arena.

"We feel this will be an excellent facility for our instruction program," said Dr. Judy Willard, coordinator of MSU's horsemanship program. "It also will give us space for horses brought to campus by students in the program."

The new barn will house walking horses, saddlebred and quarter horses for show and instructional purposes.

The event is free and open to the public.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- To give the students an understanding and appreciation of the Appalachian experience is a primary goal of the newly established Appalachian Studies Program at Morehead State University.

Approved by the Board of Regents in August, the program consists of a wide spectrum of credit and noncredit learning opportunities, as well as concerts, lectures, conferences and special activities.

Dr. James Gifford, coordinator of Appalachian studies, says the program is "important because it helps the Appalachian people gain a positive self-image."

He added:

"It is necessary and important for students who come from the mountains of Southern Appalachia and Eastern Kentucky to be educated in their culture because it is a unique culture."

Gifford also adds that the program is important "because a lot of mountain students have not been taught, what I call the 'prideful truth', about their heritage."

He continued:

"We are fortunate to have such outstanding faculty at Morehead State University with expertise in a variety of Appalachian areas. With the expertise, the students can learn that their people have been as important in history as some of the more recognizable names."

Appalachian Studies

In addition to Appalachian curriculum, including geography, folklore, history, sociology, politics, dance and music, the program promotes an understanding and appreciation of the Appalachian experiences in Kentucky.

Also available are resources and materials in the Appalachian Collections, Appalachian Development Center Monograph Series and Appalachian Celebration plus special activities including workshops, concerts, in-service training programs and special weekends.

Gifford adds that the new program has long-range benefits to participants.

"If a person has had the Appalachian Studies Program, then he or she will have a better understanding of the Appalachian people, can relate to the people and understand their values. This would be very beneficial to professional people such as nurses, doctors and teachers."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Who is under all those Eagle feathers cheering the athletic teams and flapping its wings?

It's Doug Prather, Vine Grove sophomore at Morehead State University, the 1979-80 Fightin' Eagle mascot.

Prather said he thought being the mascot and representing the University "looked like a lot of fun" after watching last year's representative at home sporting events.

Selection of the Eagle is made after tryouts, personal interviews and consideration of the individual's physical stamina, knowledge of music, ingenuity of performance and dependability.

The Fightin' Eagle is active during all MSU home football, men's basketball games and numerous special events at the University and in the region.

Prather, a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon, said the mascot honor is becoming a tradition in the fraternity, this marking the second consecutive year a member has been the Eagle.

"I've always wanted to do something like this," said the communications major. "Now I can get out there and ham it up in front of all those people under the disguise of the Eagle and at the same time try to boost the spirit of the supporters."

Prather made his 1979 home football season debut on Saturday when the Eagles hosted Middle Tennessee at Jayne Stadium. He added that it was fun and he is looking forward to the activities ahead and feels it is an honor to represent the University as mascot.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Thomas Fina of the U.S. State Department calls ratification of the SALT II treaty an important step in continuing negotiations with the Soviet Union.

Fina, former staff director to the President's General Advisory Committee on Arms Control and Disarmament during SALT I (1970-72), discussed SALT II recently at Morehead State University.

Fina said that U.S. and Soviet negotiations during the Eisenhower years began with great caution because of the tremendous distrust on both sides. He stressed that ever since the two nations have agreed to limit and reduce certain areas of competition, they have made steady progress in improving relations.

Although Fina believes that the competition between the nations will never cease, he said that restricting strategic arms will protect the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. and added that each nation has the ability to destroy each other at least two times over.

"Whether a nuclear war is started by the Soviet Union or some minor country doesn't make much difference, it will still be a devastating war which will affect all of us," Fina said.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University and Ashland Oil, Inc., are cooperating in an effort to give college students a better understanding of the business world.

Seven Ashland Oil executives are serving this semester as visiting lecturers in an "executive in residence" program. They are discussing various business topics and conducting "rap sessions" in such areas as field experience programs, economic education for teachers, small business development and continuing education.

"There is an advantage in having more than one executive address the classes," says Dr. Jack Peters, professor of management at MSU and program coordinator. "Our students receive direct perspective into the various roles of work from these executives."

He added:

"Also, by having more than one executive, the students get different viewpoints and ideas from each person."

Ashland Oil executive participating in the program are Brad Stanford, executive assistant to the chairman and director of educational relations; Frank Justice, vice president; Dick Smith, senior analyst; Mike Killian, assistant to the vice president; Walter Gooch, administrative assistant; Dan Greer, assistant to the executive vice president; and Liz Pinson, staff analyst.

The informal "rap sessions" have been planned to allow students from all academic areas of the University to meet with the executives.

"This joint program is a two-way street," added Dr Peters. "Just as MSU is learning from the executives, Ashland Oil is learning about MSU's business program and the interests of our students."

Dr. Peters added that he hopes the students realize their own capabilities after being exposed to "this outstanding group of young executives."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- What happens when the blue lights stop flashing? What rights does a person arrested have? What are the procedures an arresting officer whould follow?

Students in Street Law at Morehead State University are finding out during the fall semester from experts in the field.

"This is basically a practical approach to the study of the judicial system," said Dr. Jack Bizzel, Head of MSU's Department of Government and Public Affairs. "We utilize the expertise and first hand knowledge of various government officials to explain the process of the law to the students."

He added:

"The students get all their individual questions which range from search warrants and procedures to firearm regulations answered by our guest lecturers. The course of events is followed from the time of arrest through a trial and finally to detention."

Through the use of guest lecturers, the students receive insight into the roles of the individual law agencies and learn what the individual citizen's rights are.

Guest speakers include a city police chief, Kentucky state trooper, attorneys, FBI special agent, judges and a representative from the Eastern Kentucky Lega Services with future <sup>guests</sup> ~~guest~~ to include a parole officer, ~~the~~ prison warden and District Judge James Richardson of Owingsville.

The course attracts students from all academic areas of study especially pre-law and government with several students taking the course as an elective for personal interest.

"There is no standardized lecture, other than the discussion by the guest speaker," said Dr. Lindsey Back, assistant professor of government and course instructor. "The class is an open discussion between the students, the speaker and myself."

With the open discussion, students get more involved with the discussion and can discuss topics of primary interest to them.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- By the end of 1980, Les Meade of Morehead State University hopes to know as much about Kentucky snakes as a person can.

Meade, assistant professor of biology at MSU, is currently involved in a systematic study of the 45 different forms of snakes for his doctoral dissertation at the University of Southern Mississippi.

"My study involves a systematic study of the variations and distribution of snakes in Kentucky," Meade said. "I'm involved with the measurements, scale count, tail length, body length and total length as well as the differences in males and females."

He continued:

"With the tail, it is common to find that males and females have different tail lengths in many species. For example, in copperheads, the difference is not really clear but in garter snakes there is a definite difference."

His primary study is based on preserved snakes with only a few live specimens on hand including small copperheads, black racer, garter snakes and rat snakes.

"I'm also looking at scale patterns on the head where there are some variations," Meade added. "I also count the scales in three different places on the body and study the color variations because some snakes vary in color with age. For example, the black rat snake is blotched when young but the mature adults are almost solid black."

Snakes
2-2-2-2

One concern when working closely with snakes is being bitten.

Meade said he hasn't been bitten by a poisonous snake but has been bitten by a rat snake which "feels like getting scratched by a brier."

Sufficient time and finances prevent Meade from spending very much time in the field, searching for specimens.

"I've had residents from the region contact me about snakes in their area and now and then someone will bring me a snake," he added. "I also contacted every major museum in the nation and have received some information from them on Kentucky snakes."

He continued:

"Of the different forms of Kentucky snakes, not all occur in Eastern Kentucky. There are several that occur only in the coastal plain area of Western Kentucky and a few in Southern Kentucky and few that extend into the northern areas.

"One of the most common snakes in Eastern Kentucky is the black rat snake which grows to about eight feet," Meade added. "But, of the different forms of snakes in Kentucky, only six are venomous."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University radio station WMKY has entered the space age.

The station's receiving quality is being improved with the installation of a satellite receiving antenna.

Larry Netherton, general manager, said the satellite program will upgrade the receiving quality of programs WMKY currently receives via telephone lines from National Public Radio.

With the satellite program, WMKY will receive four channels beamed from West Star I or West Star II.

"With the four channels, we can decide what programs to air live and what programs to tape and use at a more convenient time," added Netherton.

The satellite disc will be located west of the campus after surveying several possible locations where interference from other radio signals would be eliminated.

A construction crew from Dallas, Texas will begin filling low areas and pouring the concrete foundation this month. After arrival and installation of the antenna and master control equipment, the project is expected to be completed in early 1980.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- "Epidemics such as typhoid fever, dysentery and cholera are caused by bacteria transmitted by polluted drinking water."

"This makes it very important to be able to determine whether or not water is safe to drink," said Dr. Ted Pass, professor of microbiology at Morehead State University.

Dr. Pass is director of the newly established Water Testing Laboratory at MSU which is providing bacteriological examination of public and private drinking water supplies in Eastern and Southeastern Kentucky.

"We began testing water as a result of the Gateway Area Development District expressing a need for such a service in the region," said Dr. Pass.

He continued:

"Not only do we want to provide a service for the health departments in this region but also all the public water supplies in the area as well. We will also be able to process private water supplies such as well water as needed and we also hope to work with Farmer's Home Administration (FHA)."

Since establishment in July, more than 50 samples from the region have been tested at the lab.

"We've had several contacts, not only from our immediate region, but also from different sections of state," Dr. Pass said. "So it's possible that we may be serving many of the health departments and public drinking water supply sources east of Lexington."

When testing water samples, Dr. Pass and Michael Groeschen, Newport senior and chief analyst, check for the presence of coliforms, bacteria native to the intestinal tract of mammals.

Water Testing Lab

If coliforms are present, this is an indication that the water supply is being contaminated with raw sewage either from barns, outhouses, cattle or where septic tanks are being used.

Before establishment of the MSU lab, water could be tested in Frankfort and Madisonville. The MSU lab will be able to give results of samples within one week and even within 24-hours if it is an emergency. The cost per test is $5.

"The lab meets both state and federal guidelines for water testing and only certified personnel can conduct the tests on the water samples," said Dr. Pass. "But, our students also have an opportunity to observe the procedures involved and can often simulate the operations to learn about water testing."

Additional information on the service is available from the Morehead State University Water Testing Laboratory, UPO Box 804, MSU, Morehead, KY 40351 or by calling Dr. Ted Pass, director, at 606/783-3148.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- When the Fisk University Jubilee Singers visit Morehead State University on Oct. 21, it will be a reunion of sorts.

Maurice Strider, retired associate professor of art at MSU, was a member of the Singers from 1930 until 1934 and is only one of two surviving members of the 1932 group.

In 1972, Strider was among 20 former singers returning to Fisk University for the 43rd Annual Arts Festival. The product of their work is recorded on an album entitled, "Eye of the Storm," conducted by Quincy Jones.

While at Fisk, Strider was also a member of the 80-voice Mozart Society, which included the Jubilee Singers. One of his fondest memories is a concert appearance in Carnegie Hall, where Strider says, "the acoustics are so perfect, from the uppermost balconies, you can hear a whisper on stage."

The first concerts were given in small towns and since organization in 1871, the Singers have performed across the United States, Europe and the Caribbean.

The 4 p.m. concert in Button Auditorium, sponsored by the MSU Concert and Lecture Series, is free and open to the public. Introductions will be made by Strider, former bass singer with the group.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- What did Adolf Hitler sound like? What were the broadcasts like when Pearl Harbor was bombed?

These and many other historic events as they were recorded are being heard and seen by history students at Morehead State University.

Through the use of audio cassettes, filmstrips and film, students are seeing and hearing historic events, the people involved and the impact on history.

Dr. Don Flatt, head of the Department of History, says the methods are capturing the attention of students and making classes more interesting.

Designated a "Center of Excellence" by MSU's Board of Regents, the Department of History is emphasizing audio-visual teaching techniques in its freshman classes this year.

"These methods enable the students to see and hear the way an historic event actually happened," said Dr. Flatt. "This is in comparison to the way events are often depicted on television or in the movies."

Students are also learning about several special topics, including a course which utilizes film to show how events of certain times were influential in causing films to be made.

Dr. Flatt added that the audio-visual techniques also illustrate the atmosphere of the times being studied which gives the student "an appreciation of the learning experience."

He continued:

"We now have films, filmstrips and other material that covers just about every phase of history available. We also use some of this material in the upper division classes."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- When emergency assistance is needed, Don Young is usually one of the first persons to arrive on the scene.

Young, director of Alumni Relations at Morehead State University and director of Disasters and Emergency Services for Rowan County, says that "very few programs or systems in Kentucky are as extensive as ours."

He continued:

"We meet both state and federal requirements and are one of the best equipped rescue squads anywhere."

Young has been involved with emergency services since the early 60's in Ohio and was instrumental in organizing a rescue and recovery squad in Rowan County.

"There are about 35 or 40 students and townspeople who work as volunteers with the squad," added Young. "They all work with social services and other organizations in communities where assistance is needed."

In 1978, the squad assisted in flood areas, making house to house searches and determining damages to the areas.

Young is equipped to carry his message statewide with a video tape program on rescue training used in advanced rescue seminars. The program describes rescue operations required in a variety of emergencies.

"We also work closely with the national weather service to monitor severe weather alerts and with the local cable television company about installation of an emergency warning system," Young said.

Young organizes two simulated disaster drills per year in cooperation with St. Claire Medical Center in Morehead to keep squad volunteers ready should an emergency occur in the area.

He added that cooperation with professionals in the community has been outstanding and the emergency and rescue services are constantly improving.

MOREHEAD, Ky.---The Ohio Valley Conference is one of the toughest men's cross country conferences in the country, and Steve Gosney is one of its best runners.

A junior from Cincinnati, Gosney has been Morehead State University's leading runner this fall.

"Steve has a great deal of talent and determination and I think it is the combination of these two things that have made him so successful," said Coach Kevin White. "He's also a team leader. His attitude probably does as much for the team as his running."

Gosney opened the season with a second place finish at the six-team Marshall Invitational, followed by a 12th place finish the next week in a very competitive field at the University of Kentucky's Invitational meet.

Gosney met his OVC competition for the first time this season at the Kentucky Intercollegiates where MSU faced Western Kentucky, Eastern Kentucky and Murray State, the conference's three strongest teams. Gosney took a strong seventh place finish.

Next the Eagles traveled to the Notre Dame Invitational, the nation's oldest and largest cross country meet. MSU placed fifth of 33 teams in the Gold Division and Gosney led the way, placing third.

Gosney grabbed another third place finish the next week at the seven-team Eastern Kentucky Invitational.

In MSU's only home meet, against Marshall, Gosney placed second.

His best 10,000 meter time on the season came in the Kentucky Intercollegiates (31:58), and his best five-mile time in the Eastern Kentucky Invitationals (23:50).

The Eagles are now 39-15 on the season. They will travel to Tennessee Tech, October 28 for the OVC Championship meet.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Baton twirlers are often attractive young women who have been twirling since they were little girls.

However, one of Morehead State University's feature twirlers does not fit this description at all.

Tony Dembo is the first male twirler to perform with MSU's band.

Unlike most of the women, Dembo didn't begin twirling until his sophomore year at Lebanon (Ohio) High School where he received his "big break" while trying out for drum major.

The band director offered Dembo the role of solo twirler. Even though he had no previous twirling experience, he learned quickly. His sister had twirled for five years and he believes he learned a lot from just watching her practice.

"When I was little I'd pick up sticks and pretend that they were batons," Dembo said. "My grandparents always told my parents that they were giving the wrong child twirling lessons."

He continued:

"During junior high school I ran track and played baseball but I wasn't getting anything out of it because my first love was music."

Dembo is dedicated, practicing from six to eight hours a day during the summer and four to five hours daily during the school year.

"Twirling is just like anything else, to be good, practice is a necessity," he said.

The hard work has had its benefits as Dembo favors the competition and traveling. He has had many opportunities to enjoy both.

Twirler
2-2-2-2

In high school he twirled at King's Island for the Dinah Shore television show and on the steps of the capital building in Washington, D.C. during the Cherry Blossom Festival.

His first national competition was in 1977 in Denver. Since then Dembo has won several titles including Regional Senior Boy Champion, Regional Two and Three Baton Collegiate Championship, Ohio State Three Baton Championship and also qualified for the top ten at nationals.

"My weakest trick is my elbow rolls. It's superhard to toss the baton four times and catch it flat on my elbow and keep it spinning," Dembo said.

When he began twirling he was the only male high school twirler in Ohio. At his first national competition, there were only six males competing compared to 19 this year.

"There is a definite difference between the twirling styles of men and women," he added. "When women twirl they're judged on their gracefulness and dancing abilities whereas the men are judged on speed, variety and techniques. There is a whole style of tricks and techniques for both."

He enjoys sharing the spotlight with MSU's female feature twirler Tammy Jo Worthington, Greenup junior. "I think the world of her. She's the greatest," he said. "When I'm twirling and make a mistake, Tammy Jo helps me out and when she's having trouble, I'll try to help her."

The sophomore business administration major would like to open his own twirling studio and feels that "twirling will be 'in' again someday," that "now flags and rifles are popular but in three or four years, twirlers will be back."

He has already had considerable teaching experience working with the Lebanon High School flag and rifle corps, majorettes and his own flag and rifle group at Lebanon's YMCA.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- "We are trying to identify potential sources in Kentucky to prevent any possible epidemics."

Dr. Ted Pass, professor of microbiology at Morehead State University, is referring to the extensive research being done at MSU in the area of histoplasmosis, a disease that can be fatal to humans.

Caused by a common fungus, "histoplasma capsulatum," the organism has been found in bird roosts of Kentucky and most publicized in Indiana where at least 15 persons have reportedly died of histoplasmosis during the past year.

Under a recent $39,000 grant from the Department of Human Resources, Dr. Pass and eight assistants have identified 69 bird roosts in Kentucky with 52 cultured for histoplasma capsulatum and 21 culturally positive for the fungus.

"It is extremely dangerous to disturb positive areas of the fungus," said Dr. Pass. "If the area is disturbed by either building demolition or the ground being agitated, people can become infected by inhaling air contaminated with a large number of the fungal spores."

He continued:

"Through our research, we are trying to make people aware of the situations surrounding histoplasmosis. We want to inform the people that bird roosts, primarily of blackbirds, starlings and cowbirds, are potential health hazards."

---

The average bird roost, according to Dr. Pass, is eight acres but the majority of persons who come in contact with the roosts are unaffected.

(more)

Histoplasmosis
2-2-2-2-2-2

"When affected, persons feel flu-like symptoms within six to 18 days of contact," Dr. Pass added. "The symptoms may persist anywhere from two to six weeks. During this time the person will either get over it or the problem will become more severe."

Dr. Pass noted that the project has become more significant since the recent epidemic of histoplasmosis, the largest outbreak in medical history, in Indianapolis which is reportedly the result of disturbing a blackbird roost.

"Morehead State is the only university in Kentucky and possibly the only one in the nation doing what we are doing in this field," Dr. Pass added. "We are now running approximately 1,000 soil samples per year, testing for the presence of positive fungal spores."

Dr. Pass recently visited Indianapolis and met with officials to discuss the histoplasmosis outbreak in that city.

"I visited sites where there were bird roosts and took some soil samples," Dr. Pass said. "We are now testing those samples here at Morehead State and trying to assist in tracing the source of that particular outbreak."

Dr. Pass added that positive bird roosts have been identified in the Kentucky counties of Barren, Carroll, Casey, Christian, Graves, Grayson, Hardin, Harrison, Hart, Henry, Jefferson, Logan, Marion, Marshall, Pulaski, Rowan, Shelby, Taylor and Warren.

"In a sense, what we are trying to do is a type of preventive medicine," Dr. Pass said. "We hope to identify positive roosts and then try to prevent any serious health problems."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- How did the national universities in England develop?

Dr. Charles Holt, associate professor of history at Morehead State University, will be researching this development during a sabbatical leave in England beginning in January.

The project is a follow-up of eight weeks of research conducted last summer at Columbia University when he received a National Endowment of the Humanities Fellowship.

Dr. Holt added that he will be studying how civic universities or regional universities in England which were started with local support to meet local needs, developed into national universities.

He will also be conducting research on the Liberal Party in the manuscript room at the British Museum and the House of Lords Library including the papers of several Liberal Party members such as Gladstone, Scott, Spender and Campbell-Bannerman.

Dr. Holt explained a few of the adjustments he and his family would be making in England include driving on the "wrong" side of the road and grocery buying.

"In England, you sack your own groceries and usually shop daily," he said. "Also while in England we will have to find a butcher for our meats and a farm to buy poultry and produce."

(more)

Dr. Holt
2-2-2-2

"We intend to live as Englishmen, shop as Englishmen, attend English schools and churches and live as part of an English community," Dr. Holt said.

As an historian, Dr. Holt will continue to stay "on top of the field" with his research and return to MSU and make his history classes "come alive."

"I'll be able to relate to the students with a perspective," said Dr. Holt. "They won't be able to get the real experiences of having been there from a textbook."

Although excited as though it were his first trip to England, Dr. Holt did his dissertation research in England in 1973-74, and was a faculty sponsor for 18 MSU students during an historical tour of England, Wales and Scotland during the summer of 1977. He was also faculty sponsor for 25 MSU students during a tour of France, Switzerland, Austria, Italy and Greece during the summer of 1974.

However, he and his family will also try to visit Scotland and Wales.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- With Christmas approaching, a toy doesn't have to be expensive or sophisticated to capture a child's imagination or attention.

"Toys need not be expensive, nor do they have to be so electronically advanced as to have pre-determined functions," says Karen Hammons, instructor of education at Morehead State University.

The primary function of toys is to entertain, but more important is the relation to the imagination and problem-solving capabilities.

"Children are very basic," says Hammons. "They don't require a stimulus to their imagination. The imagination is present and simply requires an outlet." Hammons adds that in selecting toys for a child, the basic consideration should be what the child likes. Every child is different with individual likes and dislikes and his or her choices should be respected to insure the child uses and benefits from the toy.

The greatest asset a toy can have is to be simple, versatile and encourage the child to create his or her own function.

"Something as simple as a box, plastic containers or old clothes can provide a child with hours of unlimited entertainment," she added.

The same is true for books, building blocks, games and records. All are relatively inexpensive and especially good in clueing in a child's imagination and retaining his interest for several hours and in a variety of ways.

(more)

Toys
2-2-2

In her work with pre-school and elementary age children, Hammons has observed that the simple props which can be used in "playing house" have the greatest attraction as well as aiding in overall development of the child. The child is afforded unlimited bounds for creating situations and solving problems.

The parents of special children are often concerned about the right types of toys or "what toy will help the child" to overcome his particular situation.

"The special child doesn't play the same way as another child, but does not require a special set of toys," Hammons explains. "Special children obviously can not communicate their ideas in the same manner as other children, but can create their own method through the most basic of toys. The same crayons, blocks, trucks and dolls are encouraged for the special child to broaden imagination, aid in coordination and communication."

Hammons stresses that the most important gift that can be given to a child is the gift of time.

"Tickets to movies or ballgames, going to the park, or simply sitting down for a while and playing house can be the greatest gift of all, the sharing of your ideas and imaginations."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Ever dreamed of a four foot candy bar? Or considered playing a six foot guitar?

The Crafts I class at Morehead State University has made these and other fantasies, come true through soft sculpture.

Soft sculpture is a relatively new form of art, which involves the use of soft man-made materials, including vinyls, foils and various textures of cloth.

First introduced in 1968, soft sculpture was a phase of Crafts I, which also includes weaving, macrame and batik. Kathy Lauderman, graduate assistant and instructor, currently works with 26 students enrolled in two sections of the class.

"I have students with a variety of interests and backgrounds from business majors to home economics majors to advertising majors enrolled," says Lauderman. "The only real requirement for the class is to have an imagination."

Students begin with an original idea, preferably a larger than life fantasy. Patterns are made from newspapers and pinned together to insure capturing the three dimensional effect. Newspaper pattern pieces are then cut out of selected materials and sewn together.

"I had one girl do everything, including all her stitching, by hand," Lauderman explained. "So knowing how to use a sewing machine isn't a real necessity in our class."

(more)

Soft Sculpture
2-2-2-2-2-2-2

The sculptures are then stuffed with fiberfill or foam.

One student, who created a six foot guitar, used a foam mattress to achieve the three dimensional effect. The guitar has all the essentials for playing, including fret markings and strings.

Other creations in soft sculpture include a two foot roll of candy, three foot fiddle with bow, 12 foot snake and a four foot candy bar which unwraps with the bar inside.

These and other soft sculpture are on display during the MSU student Christmas Art Sale in the Claypool-Young Art Gallery until Dec. 14.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Dr. Cratis Williams, nationally known authority on the cultural heritage of southern mountaineers believes there is true beauty in the native dialect of the Appalachian people.

A mountaineer himself, Dr. Williams grew up in the Big Sandy Valley, referred to frequently as Kentucky's "Last Frontier." In high school, he began collecting and learning traditional and native ballads, songs and hymns exactly as they were sung, and studied the speech and rhetoric of the mountain folk.

Dr. Williams told Morehead State University history classes that people in other parts of the country "laugh at us for our curious English."

"But, are 13 million people, with their own history, wrong? We're only different," he said.

Describing the Appalachian people as the only major sub-culture still criticized for their heritage, Dr. Williams said the mountain people were really better educated than others at the time of early settlement.

"Our ancestors' education was, in spite of the criticism, superior to that of other colonials," the Appalachian State University professor said. "Their schools were for both boys and girls and they were not taught English, but kept their original dialect."

(more)

Dialect
2-2-2-2

He continued:

"Of the 13 million people in Appalachia, more than 94 percent can trace their ancestors back to the Scotch-Irish in times of the American Revolution."

He calls this the basis for the characteristics of this dialect.

A professor of English and former Dean of the Graduate School at Appalachian State, Dr. Williams holds a bachelors and masters degree from the Univeristy of Kentucky and received his doctorate from New York Univeristy.

Dr. Williams' articles on mountain speech and idiom appeared over a ten-year period in "Mountain Life and Work," published by the Council of the Southern Mountains, headquartered at Berea College.

Through his research, Dr. Williams has received various awards including the O. Max Gardner Award for distinguished contributions to the welfare of the human race in 1973; and the Brown-Hudson Award of the North Carolina Folklore Society, recognizing him as "Master Folklorist of Appalachia 1975."

Dr. Williams' visit was sponsored by MSU's Appalachian Development Center.

Following those three famous words, another program begins at Morehead State University's television studio.

Clarence Owens, Elizabethtown sophomore, describes his floor job as the "foreman on the floor."

Before the taping session begins, Owens makes a final check of the set after the crew has finished setting up. He also calms the talent, explains the various hand cues and the different camera shots that will be used during the show.

Some of the MSU programs he has worked on include "Pin Point," a weekly public affairs interview program, and the "Coach Lichtenberg Football Show."

A transfer from Lees Junior College, Owens has also worked on student productions and special projects for KET including the children's program "Talk With Animals."

From his experiences with the production, Owens said he did decide that "animals are hard to work with" but enjoyed the experience and the production.

Carrying a double major in radio-television and political science, Owens plans to attend law school and eventually practice law with the Federal Communications Commission.

He is the son of John R. Owens, Rt. 1, Sonora.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Do you believe in magic? That the hand is quicker than the eye?

Eighteen year old Mark Sparkman does and he can prove it.

A native of Morehead and a freshman at Morehead State University, Sparkman has practiced magic for seven-years.

"I saw 'The Magic Circus' on television one night, featuring magician Mark Wilson," he explains. "It really caught my attention, so I went to the library, started checking out all the books I could find on magic and began studying the art which is also how most magicians started."

Sparkman's first performance was at the age of 13 for a group of Cub Scouts which isn't unusual because many magicians turn professional around the age of 15.

"Mark Wilson was a professional performing magician by the age of 13," Sparkman noted.

He continued:

"To tell you the truth, I really stunk in that first performance. The tricks worked, but I had no style."

Personal style is extremely important to the success of a magician, as it is to most professionals in the performing arts. Originality and creativity in style and presentation are what holds audience attention and makes magic a true art.

(more)

Magician
2-2-2-2

The first magic trick Mark learned was the relatively common card trick involving finding the selected card when returned to the full deck. Since then, he has advanced into visual illusions, rope effects, coin tricks and other "close-up" magic.

Mark also has included some audience participation tricks in his performances, such as restoring a torn newspaper and selected card tricks.

Magic is not an expensive hobby and can be performed by anyone, requiring only the most basic props. Essentially, tricks can be performed with any object and learning the art is a simple matter of reading, research and practice. The only price you pay is in time.

"I practice every day during any free time I have," Sparkman says.

He adds that his only regret is never having a chance to talk to any professionals.

He is now a member of the Society of American Magicians and hopes to alleviate this problem by attending the Magicians Convention in 1980.

He hopes to practice magic professionally someday but until then, he'll work toward a college degree at MSU.

"I'm undecided right now as to my academic concentration but I think I'd very much enjoy teaching," the young magician said. "I'm particularly interested in the field of psychology, since it is closely related to the many techniques used in magic."

Sparkman has displayed his talents at parties, clubs and organizations throughout the area and is anxious for more exposure. His performances are usually 30 minutes to an hour.

Sparkman is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Garred Sparkman of Morehead.

The Executive Council also initiated preliminary planning for a "Phil Simms-Gary Shirk Day" in early 1980 to honor the two MSU grads who are members of the New York Giants of the National Football League.
