New Bridge Needed
BY SIMON BURCHER
A century of court proceedings, more than twenty years ago, confirmed that the Powell Bridge, spanning the Kentucky River between Clay City and Richmond, would never be rebuilt. The bridge was considered dangerous to cross, and the town of Clay City was on the verge of bankruptcy.

The Old Swinging Bridge across Red River in Clay City had a little damp when the floodwaters of 1931 reached the bottom of the bridge.

Fifth Street, with the Powell Bridge Company operating a new ferry to and from the park, was the most congested of the bridges. As the mud slush from the upper reaches of Red River, a bent sheared the log into a ramshackle (now Meadow Lake). The high water drowned the 'swinging bridge'.

The Lexington & Eastern Railroad, which handled the shipping, also had extensive operations in Clay City, being located approximately halfway between Lexington and Richmond. Clay City was a haven for the blacks and the whites.

The bridge over Red River which was "through" the city. Powell Circuit Court ordered the bridge replaced, although a defect of $300 existed in the city treasury.

As shown on the Kentucky Circuit Court of Appeals, Clay City represented by John D. Atkinson, successfully overturned the decision of the lower court, Feb. 13, 1907. The high court ruled that out of the receipts...expenses of the town must be met. It may not all be applied to the discharge of a debt for any particular purpose. The town must be Beautiful, well finished and the citizens must maintain its government must be bonded.

IRON WORKS FURNACE
by DON F. JUG
L.A. ROBERT SERVICE

Three old charcoal-burning iron furnaces still stand in this region, a reminder of the vast but forgotten era of the Iron-making industry in Kentucky.

Iron is a family affair.
A family affair worth remembering.

The Old Iron Furnaces

The Old Iron Furnaces have a dim history. Many people hardly even know what they represent, a silent reminder of a bygone era. Without the proper reverence of these ancient mementos, we should know the story behind them.

Long before the days of steel, the furnaces were the backbone of the iron-making industry. In the 18th and 19th centuries, these furnaces were the site of intense activity, with workers huddled around, pouring molten metal into the vast bellows.

Many furnaces have been preserved, and some stand today as a testament to the ingenuity of those who wrought iron. These ancient furnaces are a reminder of the industrial revolution and the男人 who toiled within them.

Cut stone, smoothed and shaped, with a corner at the top. It was also, being a double furnace unit, considerably larger in width and height.

Associated with the furnace operation was an assortment of workmen. The duties of the colliers or charcoal burners here to "coal the wood"-to burn the large quantity of charcoal necessary to provide fuel for the furnaces.

A master collier and one or two helpers might work eight to nine pits a day, all of which required constant watching during the 10 days to two weeks it took for them to burn. The heat of the charcoal place a bundle of sticks, and built around it were branches of varying length and thickness. As the circumference of the circle grew, so did the height. The charcoal plant had a walled-off area for processing the charcoal.

The top was a bit of turf with leaves, branches, packed to form a cone. Each gave way with time so as not to weigh the wares, nor spoil the pit. The heat was intense, so the workers were always on the move. The charcoal was a precious commodity used in making gunpowder, the black powder used in shotguns, rifles, and cannons.

THE CHARCOAL BURNER chose and placed his branches with such accuracy that the growing cone maintained its proportions at all times. The charcoal burner would walk around the pile, listening and feeling the turf with the palms of his hands. He pulled out branches, left them out, or pushed them back as though he were playing the stops of some enormous organ that gave no sound, but responded with increased heat and glow as air was admitted or cut off.

The firefighters had been removed and was ready to be "blown in" or go into operation, a large wood fire was built in the stack. This was done in May so the furnace and the runners were ready for the stack. The furnace stack had been thoroughly heated by the fire in the stack, it was ready for the blast. This charge consisted of charcoal which had been burned in the charcoal furnace. The fire was moved from one surface of the ground and burned in on top of the furnace, and the runners were ready for the stack. The charcoal had been placed in the proper proportions. Each layer was usually a self-contained community known as a "stock plantation" under the supervision of a "stock master" usually the owner. The potential were the skilled workmen who cut the iron. Patterns made the small castings after the molten iron had run out of the furnace. Other helpers also done, were the fitters who carried or whirled the heavy burden of ore, lime, and charcoal to the furnace. The furnace stack closed the top, everything came above. charcoal binders, who had been hidden in the darkness of the charcoal stack, finished the first wagon across the bridge. The labor's preyed for the long-handled tongs and pulled them into the smoking smoke. The chips of charcoal, cracking and falling like dead leaves, shot down into the glowing blackness of the stack.

The load was always placed near the base, the iron ore was added in its proper proportions. Due to the intense heat, the oxygen in the coke began to combine with the charcoal leaving the iron to settle in a puddle. When the "puddle" was reached, where the iron in the furnace was the hottest, the charcoal had burned away or combined with the iron, which by now had separated, and the furnaceman had combined with the impurities in the iron and the slag gradually settled in the bottom, the slag then sold.

A worker would place a wooden mold into the feeder trench. The shape of the mold was taken from a piece of the old postcard distributed by the Presbyterian Orphanage. The shape of the mold was the desired shape of the final product. The mold would be placed into the feeder trench, and the mixture would be poured into the mold. When the mold was filled with the mixture, the worker would place a wooden plug into the top of the mold, and the mold would be placed into the furnace. The mixture would be heated until it reached 2,000 to 3,000 degrees, and the worker would remove the mold from the furnace and allow the mixture to cool. When the mixture had cooled, the worker would remove the plug from the mold, and the final product would be removed from the mold. The final product would be a piece of iron in the desired shape.

Remember a prominent Clay City business man, He was born in 1807 and was a struggling for Congress.

The present site of the Church of God (and building) was the location for the Presbyterian Church.

In those early days, Clay City had four doctors, all named: Dr. Williams, Dr. B. and (Dr.?) Littlepage, Dr. R. H. and Dr. Robert A.
Brown. Dr. Bruce's father was a prominent member of the railroad railways when he died.

The doctors all rode horses or took their horses and rode to their patients. No one ever thought of going by hospital, except in the time of war.

IRON FURNACES

Clay City was one of a five and making nails and other products as well as building.

As might be expected, the furnaces required huge amounts of timber to furnish the charcoal. It has been estimated that it had taken three tons of iron ore and 175 bushels of charcoal to make one ton of iron. Hence, acres and acres of valuable timber were cut down and burned.

The furnaces had their day, and then began a swift decline during the great financial panic of 1873, and after the discovery of rich iron ore beds in the Bessemer district of Alabama. Since the iron ore in this area was too small for shipment from the railroad, competition was unimpaired.

So, these furnaces, representing an investment of more than a million dollars, closed down toward the end of the nineteenth century. One by one the fires in the old furnaces flickered out, never to blaze again, thus writing the final entry in the iron-making industry in Kentucky.

CLAY CITY, at one time, had two railroad stations less than one mile apart. The track ran parallel to Highway 15 between the Florence station and the Clay City depot which was located about six miles north of Clay City. The proper alignment was left to the railroads. It was not until 1925 that a new line was built, running roughly in line with the old one. Since then, the tracks have been removed.

Clay City's Newspapers

Clay City's first newspaper, the Clay City Chronicle, was published on July 2, 1970. It is the charter newspaper of Clay City and has been published continuously since that time. The Chronicle is a weekly newspaper published on Friday and distributed to homes and businesses throughout the Clay County area.

Red River Museum

The Red River Museum, located in Clay City, is a world-famous museum dedicated to the history and culture of the Red River Valley. The museum features exhibits on the history of the region, including the history of the Red River Canal and the Red River Valley flood. The museum also features a large collection of artifacts, including rare documents and photographs.

Reproductions of Victorian furniture, particularly American reproductions, often retain some of the more colorful aspects of the originals. Modern upholstery techniques have made such seats - either tufted or with plush fabrics such as velvet, brocade, and brocaded velvets - bright and glamorous. The same time offer more durability because of chemical treatment.

Use Two Small Tables Together

When they are the same shape, and often size, an interesting coffee table is the result. Two slightly designed smaller tables together for a feeling of importance, in front of a sofa. Make sure, however, that the two tables are not too similar. They do not overpower the smaller sofa or love seat.

The beauty of these smaller pieces is that they can be moved from room to room. This flexibility is a decided advantage, and one can be used from time to time. The more creative homeowner develops a fine faculty of combination and variety in the furniture around.

...and were the largest in the county. In fact, many businesses were on hand to handle the crowds. The demands would take them to the "Coliseum" which was beyond the city limits. The next stop was the Island Mill. It was not uncommon for six or eight men to be locked up at the same time for misdemeanors during the picnics.

There was a number of vacant lots, the offi of the Clay City Bank. Joe Mount's garage building in about 1920 next; then the Clay City Roller Mill where flour was made. John Dimbrovich's blacksmith shop was next. Mr. Dimbrovich had been a very skilled blacksmith and would "iron a run" like nobody else.

In the early 1900's, where J. W. Smith's market is now, was a large machine shop operated by B.C. Bagston and Sons. Albert, Jake, John and J.W. Kunbrick IS operated by "Chummy". This business was located on the bank of the old rail run. Across the Dell Park was the park run by the Lexington and Eastern Railroad. It had a fountain in the center around which were beautiful flowers and plants.

Sunday afternoon, people gathered in the park to hear Clay City's Brass Band play. Sunday afternoon in the park was a high spot of the week for Clay City.

The Clay City Park was located near the depot which for a time was operated by 24 hours a day, not only to the park. Trains came through regularly and the mail was picked up from a hook hanging over the track. The mail hopped and water tank was loaded by hand. The main change was the installation of an automatic Superhopper, four Telos, Fair & Building Swifts. Working at the pumping station was a full-time job so there were four passenger trains daily, plus freight trains. A steam rail motor ran by a water pump without stopping for water.

Art Teflo, who now resides on Black Creek, helped deliver coal at the "Bungalow." The Lykens Store was once the location of Benamin D. Beason's blacksmith shop. Behind the store was the Clay City City Park where baseball teams were used. The seats were made from logs by hand and from the large logs the grandstand was used. In the present, a long new 2,000 seat grandstand seating area was quite accustomed with.

The Clay City Bank Mill was located behind where the heavy building is now. Stoves were shipped all over the country from Clay City.

"We looked at the past," a part of it, and now to face the future. Clay City is growing and growing sometimes hard. We must give up some things in order to acquire others. Clay City was once a small village.

With it will come additional buildings, businesses, schools, and people. Maybe we'll be one of them. If so, Clay City will be a better place to grow up, a safer place to grow up, and a more progressive city-a place for those growing up and the center of everything.
Formulas Disappear in New Era of Variety, Excitement and Exploration

By GLOREN WADE

In a future design setting on a national home premiere

As an icon of change in retailing, life, and thought, home furnishings have undergone revolutionary transformations. In the 1960s, we as a people have moved from the preoccupations of the 1950s, a period focused on the traditional family unit. We have moved on, embracing the new era of variety, excitement, and exploration. Our new designs are not just a reflection of what we want, but rather a reflection of who we are. Our new lifestyles are not just the result of our desires, but the result of our realities. Our new looks are not just the product of our imagination, but the outcome of our experiences. Our new choices are not just the expression of our identities, but the embodiment of our values.

The Family Room

The living room is the heart of the home. It serves as a multi-functional space for relaxation, entertainment, and family gatherings. A comfortable seating area, a well-stocked bookshelf, and a fireplace add to the ambiance of the room.

Consider placing a multipurpose furniture piece such as a sliding door bookcase. It provides additional storage and acts as a room divider. This piece is perfect for displaying family photos, books, or decorative items.

The room should have a touch of personal flair. Consider adding a vase of fresh flowers, a family photo album, or a piece of artwork. This will give the room a personal touch and make it feel more inviting.

The Built-in Mix... Use Your Own Ideas for a Room That is For You and Your Family

The homemaker has such a genius in her. She can turn her head to any problem and solve it simply. The homemaker has such an ability that very often her interpretations and ideas triumph. She appreciates that finishing should be in good taste and not too much like the rest. Modern production tech- niques mean a selection of all kinds of furniture, but she does want, much less the cost. It made out-door to go together.

Many who, at best, have difficulty in making our choices and being satisfied with them have the satisfaction of good taste, but most refreshing to her is the satisfaction of making choices that are her own. She sees all kinds of finish colors, and even before going, with the split of her imagination, she can see the many well and scientifically designed items and beautiful finishes available to the homemaker who dreams of making a new home.

We have found... that very often her reproduces these carvings that create her own look. She does want, much less the cost. It made out-door to go together.

The growing interest in collecting today is matched with desires for unique, personalized furnishings for the home. Today's designer is creating a piece of furniture that is not only a functional item but a decorative one as well. Today's design is not only for the bedroom, but for the living room, too.

translated freely as a cabinet, what not, or free standing bookcase the average height of the etagere is between six to seven feet containing approximately five shelves. The housing area was designed for some cases, it can be built in, and can be used as a small part of a bedroom or living room. They are even used as elevated night tables on each side of a bed. The etagere and each has at least one or two groups in its line. They're becoming available in every style from Mediterranean and Spanish to the country look and modern.

Besides the homemaker's increasing attention to decorative accent furniture, the etagere mixes exceptionally well. A reproduction 18th century etagere will add a personal touch to a modern setting. And a cool steel and glass design will add just the right contrast to a room full of traditional furniture. With so many Americans on the move, versatility is an important consideration in selecting furniture. The etagere that functions as a divider and a storage unit in an apartment will fit perfectly in any room of a future home.

All About Furniture—
Booklet Now Available

The Southern Furniture Manufacturers Association has developed a booklet informing consumers about furniture into one publication.

The booklet is available at Stokley's Furniture in Clay City. It gives tips on selecting the correct materials, styles, and types of furniture, as well as describing and illustrating different styles available. The booklet also includes a coupon for a free gift with each purchase.

The Old Homeplace—The family (Ruth and John, sister and brother) are the oldest continuous residents of Clay City. Ruth says her father came to Clay City with his family when he was three years old. At that time, there were only three houses in Clay City. Ruth's and John's father built this one for his own family. (Photo: Ruth Stokley and John Eaton)

Apartment Boom Challenges Furniture Designers

A continuing range of apartment conversions presents new and challenging design problems for furniture manufacturers. A country furniture manufacturer, for example, is finding the demand for larger furnished apartments is sweeping the country in popularity. As a result, some manufacturers of apartment furniture are already turning to design to relieve the monotony and subsequent avoidance of furniture that may have been one city today and another tomorrow.

In 1919, almost one quarter of the new apartment units were built with storage and space that hold not only jewelry and other smaller furnishings in many homes but also space to throw parties. Today, the new apartment units are already being designed to make the most obvious use of the available space. Apartments are being designed with storage facilities for jewelry, silverware, china, and other small items. In addition, the new apartments are often two rooms, which makes it possible to have the smallest apartment furnished with a bed, chair, and table, and still have space for another bed and table.

In a successful apartment, it may be necessary to use furniture to divide a large space into smaller rooms. The apartment dwellers may be able to separate the rooms with drapes, and use the living room for living and dining areas.

Apartments are being designed with storage facilities for jewelry, silverware, china, and other small items. In addition, the new apartments are often two rooms, which makes it possible to have the smallest apartment furnished with a bed, chair, and table, and still have space for another bed and table.

In a successful apartment, it may be necessary to use furniture to divide a large space into smaller rooms. The apartment dwellers may be able to separate the rooms with drapes, and use the living room for living and dining areas.

Upholstered Furniture
Requires Weekly Cleaning

Upholstered furniture will gather dust and collect dirt and soot, as well as fibers from clothing, and the tiny bits of particles left by the feet of the family pets.

It is necessary to remove these particles, and the way
this may be accomplished is by shaking the fabric, brushing or vacuuming. The use of vacuuming is preferable as it does not damage the fibers. The volume of dust in the air, from the walls and all surfaces, is such that it can be removed by this method. If this is not done, a build-up of dust will be present, which can cause the fibers to become stiff and brittle.

It is best to remove any dust or dirt that may be on the fabric, before it is cleaned in the machine. This can be accomplished by using a vacuum cleaner or by brushing the fabric with a soft brush.

Rugs and draperies should be vacuumed regularly.

In the case of draperies, they should be hung up to air during the week, to allow the dust to fall to the floor. These draperies can then be cleaned in the machine. If they are not cleaned in this manner, the dust will be transferred to the draperies, and will be transferred back to the draperies in the next washing cycle.

It is best to avoid using the dry cleaning method for all types of fabrics, as it can cause the fibers to become stiff and brittle. It is also important to avoid using the steam cleaning method, as it can cause the fibers to become damaged.

If you have any questions about the care of your upholstered furniture, please do not hesitate to contact us. We are here to serve you.
