MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Training in how to find, get and keep a job is now available through a Job Preparedness Project conducted by Morehead State University's Appalachian Development Center.

This service is available to agencies, organizations and businesses in the 49 Eastern Kentucky counties served by the ADC.

The project has provided services to the Buffalo Trace Area Development District, the Licking Valley Community Action Program, the Gateway Community Services Organizations and Bell County CETA.

Shirley Hamilton, community services director, says she is especially pleased with the results of those programs that have already been administered.

"The success of our programs can be attributed to two factors," she said. "We have designed a unique program tailored to answer the specific needs of the communities we serve. We have recruited highly professional and experienced teachers."

The project consists of a 40-hour class arranged to the individual's needs. Classes may be provided through one week of eight-hour day sessions; through eight weeks of one eight-hour day sessions; or through other alternative plans.

The program provides information on planning a career, choosing the right job, getting a job and keeping a job in addition to information on completing job applications, writing a resume, successfully handling a job interview and developing good work habits.

Additional information on the project is available by contacting Shirley Hamilton, Community Services Director, MSU, ADC, Morehead, Ky. 40351 or by calling 606/783-4731.
