MOREHEAD, Ky. --- "The weather is mild in America, and the women are pretty," said Hassan ElSheikh, one of ten senior-level Egyptian government officials visiting Morehead State University as part of the Egyptian Training Program.

The program is sponsored by the United States Agency for International Development (AID) and the Organization for the Reconstruction and Development of Egyptian Villages (ORDEV).

ORDEV is an agency comparable to the Area Development Districts (ADD's) in Kentucky.

"Like the ADD's, ORDEV initiates and administers economic development in rural areas," explained Michael H. Diehl of the Bluegrass ADD. Diehl is working with MSU and Eastern Kentucky University to train the Egyptians in accounting, finance and administration.

While the hills of Eastern Kentucky are much different from rural Egypt, technics the officials are learning here will help them in their work when they return home.

"This program is very useful for all of us," said Mohamed Kayed. "Our teachers here are giving us many new ideas."

Kayed, the executive official of Kena, one of Egypt's 26 regional governments, came to the United States last year to visit poultry, turkey and dairy farms. Through ORDEV, he has created similar farms and factories in his area.

(more)
The education he receives at MSU will help him in follow-ups and evaluations of projects when he returns to Egypt.

In addition, the visitors are comparing the Egyptian and American methods of rural development.

After leaving MSU, they will go to EKU for five weeks of more advanced training in economics and administration. They will then spend two weeks working with Diehl at the Bluegrass ADD office in Lexington.

Before leaving Kentucky, the visitors will tour the state capitol, meeting with Lieutenant Governor Martha Layne Collins, and be named Kentucky Colonels.

Dear Editor:

As of March 1, 1982, MSU's weekly environmental series by Dr. Jerry Howell, "Our Fragile Earth," will shift to a periodic distribution schedule.

We feel this change will provide your readers with more detailed analysis of specific environmental issues on a timely basis. Future columns will address such concerns as toxic waste disposal, oil shale, reclamation of surface mined land and acid rain.

Your publication of "Our Fragile Earth" over the last five years is sincerely appreciated. Your use of Dr. Howell's material has helped to inform the people of Eastern Kentucky about environmental issues.

You will remain on our mailing list for "Our Fragile Earth" and your comments on the articles will be most welcome.

Thank you for your interest in this and other services of Morehead State University.

Sincerely,

Sharon Crouch-Farmer
Coordinator of News Services

Construction contracts totaling $372,772 are expected to be awarded a Morehead contractor for work at Morehead State University.

Packs', Inc. was the low bidder last week in Frankfort when state officials opened bids on the interior renovation of Button Auditorium and on the installation of passenger elevators in Baird Music Hall and the Howell-McDowell Administration Building.

The apparent low bid on the Button project was $234,886 and the elevator projects, combined for bidding purposes, drew a low of $137,886.

Funds for the projects were appropriated nearly two years ago but bids were delayed by a statewide freeze on capitol construction and, in the case of the Button renovation, for two design changes aimed at reducing the cost of the project. The elevators will be financed out of a fund established by the General Assembly to assist state agencies in providing handicapped persons with access to public facilities.

"We are optimistic that contracts will be awarded in the near future and that work will begin shortly thereafter," said MSU President Morris L. Norfleet. "These projects represent the largest construction allocation on campus to be assigned to a local contractor and we are pleased that local workmen and their families will benefit."

Keith Pack, president of Packs', Inc., said the projects will involve mostly indoor work and that will mean winter employment for some of his employees who might have been furloughed for the winter months.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University's Camden-Carroll Library has been chosen to receive a live satellite transmission of the American Library Association's midwinter conference.

Originating in Denver, the program, entitled "Marketing: A Key to Surviving and Thriving," will be aired at the library on Tuesday, Jan. 26, at 11 a.m.

Dr. Jack Ellis, MSU's director of libraries, says the program would be of special interest to area librarians.

"Local viewers will meet at Camden-Carroll's Learning Resource Center for the two-hour telecast, which will review the marketing challenges which the nation's 100,000 libraries face as they confront the special problems of the eighties," he stated.

MSU is one of 50 sites in the U.S. and the only location in Kentucky receiving the program. Local viewers will join the audience in Denver by telephone for an hour-long nationwide discussion following the program.

Topics to be discussed include public sector marketing, marketing analysis, library promotion, research facilities, library services planning and government depository libraries.

Persons interested in watching the ALA program must make reservations through Dr. Jack D. Ellis at (606) 783-2143. No fee will be charged.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University's Concert and Lecture Series resumes Thursday, Jan. 28, with one of the legends of jazz music, the Teddy Wilson Trio.

Wilson, best known as the pianist in the Benny Goodman Quartet, was among the first discoveries of jazz impresario John Hammond.

In 1956, a part in "The Benny Goodman Story" led to his national tour with a trio. His revolutionary piano style is recognized internationally and for many years Wilson taught at the Juilliard School of Music.

The 8 p.m. concert in Button Auditorium is free and open to the public.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Care for medically home-bound patients requires more than just medicine.

"You have to look at a person as a total being and consider their mental and social as well as physical needs," says Pauline Ramey, assistant professor of nursing at Morehead State University.

Preparing home health aides to provide such needs was the basis of 60 hours of instruction throughout Kentucky in home nursing care and nutrition. As part of a federally-funded continuing education program administered by the Kentucky Department for Human Resources, Mrs. Ramey and Eena J. Adams, assistant professor of home economics at MSU, taught more than 100 aides who currently care for home-bound patients.

Using a curriculum prepared by the National Council for Homemaker-Home Health Aide Services, Inc., Ramey and Adams adapted the material to teach student's specific needs.

"Some of the ladies had zero experience, some had years of experience," Ramey says. "Some of them may not have a degree at all, but I saw more love and compassion than I have seen anywhere."

The students, who Ramey says are of all ages and backgrounds, were awarded continuing education credits for the classes, which were counted as work days.

Proper nutrition is also an important part of all health care, says Adams.

"Nutrition and homemaking skills are taught so when they go into the home, they can help with the person's cooking and buying," she explains.

MSU also provided audiovisual materials and equipment to supplement the curriculum. The books, films and pamphlets were selected by Ramey and Adams with the special assistance of Jane Rand, coordinator of MSU's autotutorial lab.

"We set up a traveling box of the materials and the equipment that they could take with them to the various sites," says Rand.

Sara Hellard, who coordinated the program for the state, says she came to Morehead for help because, "I found the attitude and the willingness to cooperate so accommodating." She added that the department will hold similar workshops on the Morehead and Bowling Green campuses this year for licensed and registered nurses.

"The home health aides developed self-confidence on the job, improved their personal care skills and acquired a better understanding of the family's position in home health care as a result of the program," Hellard said. "We appreciate the University's assistance and the personal dedication of Mrs. Ramey and Ms. Adams."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- An exhibit of contemporary Chinese calligraphy and paintings is scheduled at Morehead State University's Claypool-Young Art Gallery from Feb. 16 through Feb. 26.

Sponsored by the Republic of China's National Museum of History and the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, the traveling exhibit includes selected works by eminent modern Chinese artists.

Calligraphy, the art of handwriting Chinese characters, has increased in popularity throughout the twentieth century. Based on traditions passed down from generation to generation, many writing styles, including the modern formal and cursive styles, the ancient style and seal script, are depicted in modern calligraphy.

Chinese painting, an ancient art more than 3,000 years old, has been changing throughout this century because of the influence of Western Art. While continuing to follow traditional Chinese theories and methods, today's painters have added Western techniques to their skills.

The MSU gallery is open weekdays from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. The exhibit is free and open to the public.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Kentucky crafts are hot items in the marketplace. As a result, Morehead State University's Appalachian Development Center and the Kentucky Arts and Crafts Foundation are sponsoring two workshops to help Kentucky craftspeople develop sound methods for pricing and marketing crafts.

Workshops for "Product Costing" and "Sound Business Practices" will be conducted in the Riggle Room of the Adron Doran University Center on Friday, Feb. 5, from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m.

Accurate costing of a craft item, determining exactly how much money you've invested in materials, how much time you've spent, what your time is worth, and what kind of profit you can reasonably expect, can mean the success or failure of a craft business. These factors will all be discussed during the morning session.

Jamie Stone, director of the Berea Broomcraft industry, Bill Edmonds of Possum Trot and Lila Bellando, president of Churchill Weavers, will be instructors for the morning session.

The afternoon session, conducted by Howell Anderson, business manager for Churchill Weavers, will consist of the procedure for turning a craft into a business. Included will be information on selling, billing, and keeping accurate records to help craftspeople develop a sound system for completing a sale and getting paid.

A fee of $3 is required for material costs. Additional information is available from the Appalachian Development Center at (606) 783-4731.
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University's Faculty Low-Brass Trio will perform in concert Wednesday, Feb. 3, in Duncan Recital Hall.

Members of the trio include Milford Kuhn, associate professor of music and principal hornist with the Lexington Philharmonic; Dr. Edward Malterer, associate professor of music and principal trombonist with the Lexington Philharmonic; and Dr. Earle Louder, professor of music.

The program of contemporary music will include works by American, French and Hungarian composers.

The recital will be repeated at the Combined Kentucky-Ohio Music Educators Convention in Cincinnati on Friday, Feb. 5.

The 8:15 p.m. performance is free and open to the public.

The "Gateway Focus on Elderly," a program providing volunteer assistance for Morgan County's elderly population, is on its way. A pilot Menifee County project paved the way for allocation of federal funds to expand services into neighboring Morgan County.

The program is jointly implemented by five separate agencies, including Morehead State University's Appalachian Development Center, Gateway District Health Department, the Gateway Area Development District, Kentucky Bureau for Manpower Services, and Kentucky Bureau for Social Insurance.

Provisions are being made to establish a volunteer team to perform services for the elderly in a variety of areas including food, health, recreation and physical tasks such as shopping and laundry.

The volunteer team is now being recruited. Any person in Morgan County who is 16 years or older and who has a valid driver's license and access to a vehicle is eligible. Volunteers will be reimbursed for "out of pocket" expenses with a monthly stipend of $72.50 and will receive travel expenses at the rate of 18 cents per mile.

An orientation and training program, to be conducted for volunteers, will utilize staff training materials from each of the five participating agencies.

Sessions will include training in communication skills which are particularly effective with the elderly, nutrition with special emphasis on diets for diabetics, and emergency medical and physical therapy techniques.

(more)
Applications for the Morgan County "Focus on Elderly" program are available at the Kennedy Library in West Liberty.

For additional information contact Shirley Hamilton, assistant director for community services, Appalachian Development Center, Morehead, KY 40351. The telephone number is (606) 783-4731.

While it hasn't yet reached the level of the major television networks, Morehead State University's MSU-TV continues to expand its broadcast schedule to complement its increasing programming production.

The campus station's latest addition is a noon broadcast each weekday.

Since last Monday, a half-hour broadcast has been alternating between two different shows.

On Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, MSU-TV is airing 'MSU At Large' and on Tuesdays and Thursdays the noon show is 'MSU Basketball '82,' a talk show featuring Eagle Head Coach Wayne Martin.

Bill Rosenberg, MSU's director of Media Services, says the increased broadcast time and expanded audience could have a snowballing effect on the station's staff.

"We are pleased that these programs are developing such a campus following and believe this enthusiasm will inspire a continued high quality production effort on behalf of both our professional and student staffs," Rosenberg said.

Terry Blong, host of 'MSU At Large,' talks with campus residents who are knowledgeable about topics of special interest to students, according to Rosenberg. Don Russell hosts the basketball show.

(more)
The two shows are regularly seen in late afternoon on the campus station, and will continue in those time slots. "MSU At Large" airs at 5:30 p.m. Monday and Tuesday at 4:30. "MSU Basketball '82" is shown at 6 p.m. Monday and Wednesday.

The noon and regular broadcasts of the two shows are part of a six-program format aired by MSU-TV.

"Dianoia," hosted by Dick Moon, is a socially-oriented half-hour program airing Monday at 4:30 p.m. and Friday at 5:30 p.m.

"Our Appalachia," with host Phil Conn, MSU's vice president for university and regional services, is a twice-weekly program devoted to customs and traditions of Eastern Kentucky and the Appalachian Mountains. The show is broadcast at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday and 4:30 p.m. Wednesday.

"You and the Law," hosted by Fred Barnsdale, chief of the Morehead Police Department, is a program of discussion of crime, law and law enforcement. The show is aired Wednesday at 5:30 p.m. and Thursday at 4:30 p.m.

"MSU Report," with host Keith Kappes, MSU's director of public affairs, is a half-hour program which examines MSU's teaching, research and public service activities. The program is shown at 5:30 p.m. Thursday and 4 p.m. Friday.

The station also airs a weekly telecast of Eagle basketball games and other features on an intermittent basis.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- John Gaventa, co-author of the Appalachian Regional Commission's "Appalachian Land Ownership Study," is lecturing Thursday, Feb. 11, at 8 p.m. in Morehead State University's Reed Auditorium.

The lecture, "Land Ownership in Appalachian Kentucky," is sponsored by MSU's Appalachian Development Center and funded by a grant from the Sperry and Hutchinson Foundation as the fourth of a six-part series entitled "Our Mountain Heritage."

Gaventa also is the author of "Power and Powerlessness," the study of the peculiar nature of the distribution of power in the Clear Fork Valley, near the Cumberland Gap, as a result of a large portion of land having been owned by an absentee British corporation since the turn of the century.

In his "Appalachian Land Ownership Study," Gaventa states that "absentee corporations, individuals, and government agencies control the wealth and destiny of Appalachia." The study concludes that land ownership patterns in Appalachia are basic to all other regional problems.

For example, in Martin County, Ky., "a subsidiary of the Norfolk and Western Railway owns one-third of the surface and more than half of the below-surface rights but the company pays an annual property tax to the county of only 13 cents per acre."

Another startling revelation made by the study is that "Harvard University, the largest private, non-profit owner of mineral rights in Appalachia, owns 9,720 acres of oil and gas rights and pays no tax at all on them."

(more)
John Gaventa is a Tennessee native who has written widely on the Appalachian region in both academic and popular journals. He is currently employed at the Highlander Research Center at New Market, Tenn., where he works with community and labor groups in the Appalachian region.

Concerning the recently published study on land ownership patterns in Appalachia, he says: "No one who has lived for any time in Appalachia can be surprised to hear that a handful of absentee corporations control huge portions of the region's land and minerals and pay a pittance in local taxes."

"But," he continued, "the documentation of land ownership and taxation in county after county establishes for the first time the pervasive pattern of inequity, and this factual information should provide the basis for long-needed changes."

The lecture is free and open to the public.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Flashy costumes, lively music and twirling flags will be part of the excitement on Saturday, Feb. 13, when Morehead State University's Winter Guard holds its first Blue and Gold Color Guard Competition.

Winter Guard is similar to the color guard which appears with the marching band and performs routines with rifles and flags. However, they perform indoors during the winter.

"There is more to it than people realize," said Jeff Davis, Canton N.C. senior, one of MSU's Winter Guard co-captains. "You have to have everything timed perfectly. You have to know your routine so well that is you drop your flag or rifle, you can go right back into it."

Davis and Larry Rebilott, Louisville, Ohio, sophomore, also co-captain, will help judge the event, along with members of the Kentucky Color Guard circuit.

More than six groups from Kentucky high schools are expected to take part in the solo, duet and group competitions scheduled to start at 10 a.m. at MSU's Wetherby Gymnasium. Workshops also will be held.

The event is free and open to the public.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Anyone who would paint his car like a French fighter must like airplanes.

And Dennis Karwatka, associate professor of industrial education at Morehead State University, certainly does like airplanes.

"I'm interested in the old airplanes, especially pre-1955," he says.

But in 1979, Karwatka, who has worked for Boeing and Pratt & Whitney aircraft companies, turned down a job offer in aeronautics with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA). Although he believes in constantly evaluating himself by remaining active in the job market, Karwatka decided to stay at MSU where he has taught since 1970.

"Hey, this is a cute little town and a very nice school," says the second-generation American. Despite his Polish heritage, Karwatka says he is "no more concerned than the average American" about the current problems in Poland.

Karwatka is a popular instructor at MSU although he had no formal background in teaching.

"I know what the students have to know because I've worked in the field," he says. "Content is far more important than technique in college teaching."

"I never wanted to be a teacher," he continues. "But one of the advantages of teaching is being able to work with people instead of machines. And this is a University of people."

(more)
For the past two years, Karwatka has written a monthly column on the history of American technology for "School and Shop," a magazine for industrial education students and teachers.

Karwatka, a mechanical engineer and one of three registered professional engineers on the MSU faculty, foresees a bright future for technology.

"While the quantity of advancements may not increase as much in the future, the quality most certainly will improve," he says.

And, as technology advances, it leaves Karwatka behind in only one area.

"They just don't build my kind of airplanes anymore," he says with a sigh.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University's public radio station, WMKY, and National Public Radio celebrate Black History Month during February with a variety of special programming that examines the rich culture and myriad concerns of black Americans.

Each Thursday in February an hour-long special will explore the black experience including the teachings and music of the black church, the short life and legendary career of jazz immortal Clifford Brown and the work and views of poet Maya Angelou.

NPR's weekly documentary series, "Horizons," also devotes the month to a special review of the present and future interests of black America. And finally, NPR salutes blacks who were first in their respective fields in a series of five-minute profiles.

"Gospel: Preaching in Word and Song" studies the music, drama, dance, storytelling, interviews and excerpts from black workshop services. The broadcast time is Thursday, Feb. 11, at 10 p.m.

Airing Thursday, Feb. 18, at 10 p.m., is "Shades of Brown," an intimate portrait of the life and music of legendary jazz trumpeter Clifford Brown. His story unfolds through interviews with his wife, Larue Brown Watson, percussionist Max Roach, the Institute of Jazz Studies' Dan Morganstern and close friend and fellow musician, Benny Golson.

"Black Classics: Musical Masterpieces" features musical contributions made by black composers and performers. The music is excerpted from a 1981 performance by the Buffalo Philharmonic under the direction of Julius Rudel. This program will air Thursday, Feb. 25, at 10 p.m.

(more)
The weekly series of half-hour documentaries, "Horizons" adds to the February salute with four programs including "Afro-American Children's Games," "Blacks in Israel," "Black Colleges," and "The Voting Rights Act." "Horizons" is heard at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday.

A series of five-minute features round out the month's celebration. Among those interviewed are entertainers Bill Cosby, Eubie Blake, Roberta Flack and Mary Lou Williams.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Cutbacks in funds to provide services for the elderly can pose major social problems for some senior citizens and one solution to the problem is the use of volunteer services.

In recognition of the needs of the elderly, the "Gateway Focus on Elderly" program now is expanding services to include all five counties of the Gateway Area Development District.

The program was initiated as a pilot project in Menifee County and has expanded into Morgan, Rowan, Bath, and Montgomery counties.

The program is jointly implemented by five agencies, including Morehead State University's Appalachian Development Center, Gateway District Health Department, the Gateway Area Development District, Kentucky Bureau for Manpower Services, and Kentucky Bureau of Social Insurance.

Provisions are being made to establish a volunteer team to perform services for the elderly in a variety of areas, including food, health, recreation and with physical tasks such as shopping and laundry.

The volunteer teams now are being recruited. Any person in Rowan, Bath or Montgomery Counties who is 16 years or older and who has a valid driver's license and access to a vehicle is eligible. Volunteers will be reimbursed for "out of pocket" expenses with a monthly stipend of $72.50 and will receive travel expenses at the rate of 18 cents per mile.
An orientation and training program, to be conducted for volunteers, will utilize staff training materials from each of the five participating agencies.

Sessions will include training in communication skills which are effective with the elderly, nutrition with special emphasis on diets for diabetics, and emergency medical and physical therapy techniques.

Applications for the "Focus on Elderly" program are available at the public libraries in Morehead, Owingsville and Mt. Sterling.

Additional information is available from Shirley Hamilton, assistant director for community services, Appalachian Development Center, MSU, Morehead, KY 40351. The telephone is (606) 783-4731.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Bassin' will once again be the talk of the town as fishermen invade the Morehead State University campus to attend the Bass Fishing Institute (BFI) on Saturday and Sunday, April 17 and 18.

MSU's Academic-Athletic Center will be the center of activity for a two-day program geared to all ages of anglers and conservationists.

BFI, a product of Indiana State University and the American Institute of Bass Fishing, is a comprehensive course of instruction. Some of the nation's finest fishermen reveal techniques acquired through years of work. Many of the nation's leading tackle manufacturers also will be on hand to provide each student with current information and individualized instruction.

Although dubbed "Bass Fishing Institute," the course of instruction is designed to make better anglers of all who attend no matter what their favorite species. A special feature of the Institute is the "family plan" which enables an adult to register any youngster (aged 10-15) free. In addition, the spouse of a regular paying adult may enroll for half the regular fee, qualifying an additional free registration for a youngster.

Registrations are now being accepted and should be sent to: Bass Fishing Institute, Office of Campus Events, MSU, Morehead, KY 40351. The contact person is Harry Ryan and his telephone number is (606) 783-5171.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Faye Belcher, associate director of libraries at Morehead State University, is working with other Kentucky librarians to form a statewide coal information network.

Representing MSU, Ms. Belcher recently participated in the first Kentucky Coal Information Network "think tank" meeting.

As a member institution, MSU's Camden-Carroll Library is developing a coal and energy bibliography to be distributed to coal operators, miners, libraries, and environmentalists. MSU's Energy Research Laboratory and Appalachian Development Center will finance the project.

"Written in layman's terms, the bibliography won't be approached in a scholarly fashion," Belcher says. "This will help bridge the gap between reading levels from eighth grade to college level."

A section on legal aspects regarding coal, such as mineral rights, will be included in the bibliography. Jim Ramsey, a Pikeville attorney, affiliated with Coal Industry Technical Assistance (CITAC), will assist in preparing this section.

An Interlibrary Loan and a Bibliographical Retrieval Service (BRS), with 50 data bases by computer terminal will also be used in the CIN.

Ms. Belcher has been elected to the network's seven-member steering committee, whose purpose is to establish guidelines, a constitution and by-laws.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Disco isn't the only dance on the Morehead State University campus these days.

Through the hard work and dedication of a dozen volunteers and faculty sponsor Kate Hawkins, MSU now boasts a dance squad called the "Golden Girls."

"They are a very live wire and hard working group," Ms. Hawkins says of the dancers.

The squad has already performed at two events and will appear next at MSU's annual band clinic in February.

"If people want to sparkle up their meetings, conferences or sporting events, the girls are eager to perform," says Ms. Hawkins.

The Golden Girls are led by squad captain Kimberly Dye, Reynoldsburg, Ohio, sophomore. Other members are Kathy Barnett, Muncie, Ind., freshman; Angela Bolton, Louisville freshman; Tammie Lynn Bunyard, Fuget sophomore; Melissa Clark, Olive Hill junior; Dawn Deeter, Tipp City, Ohio, junior; Susan Ellis, Sardinia, Ohio, senior; Deborah Ison, Enon, Ohio, sophomore; Wendy Langner, Cincinnati freshman; Catherine McMurtry, Russellville, Ohio, freshman; Leah Ann Miller, Kingston, Ohio, freshman; Susan Mowder, Westerville, Ohio, freshman.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Dr. J. E. Duncan, dean emeritus of Morehead State University's School of Humanities, has been named chairman of MSU's 1982 Founders Day Committee.

Appointed by MSU President Morris L. Norfleet, the committee will plan activities for Thursday, March 18, to mark the 60th anniversary of the founding of the institution in 1922.

Dr. Duncan served as dean of the School of Humanities for 15 years until relinquishing the post in 1981 to return to the music faculty on a part-time basis.

Also representing the faculty on the 12-member committee is Dr. M. E. Pryor, professor of biology. Staff members include Virginia Caudill, director of payrolls; Keith Kappes, director of public affairs; and Jack Henson, director of university center services.

Student members include Todd Holdren, Chillicothe, Ohio, junior; Jennifer Noland, Irvine sophomore; Mark Johnson, Owingsville graduate student and Sandra Spurlock, Morehead sophomore. Lorene S. Day, assistant professor emeritus, represents retired faculty and staff members. Serving from the community is Dr. Byron Wéntz.

Morehead State and Murray State universities were created by an act of the Kentucky General Assembly which was signed into law by Gov. Edwin Morrow on March 8, 1922. The institutions were established as state normal schools and evolved into state teachers colleges in 1930. Both became state colleges in 1948 and regional universities in 1966.

MOREHEAD, Ky.--How do you spell relief?

In the wintertime at Morehead State University, students spell it "C-A-U-D-I-L-L H-E-A-L-T-H C-L-I-N-I-C."

Frequent trips between campus buildings in the cold winter weather turn the clinic into a popular gathering place for students.

The clinic's waiting room fills quickly each weekday morning as students seek relief from colds, sore throats, flu viruses and other ailments.

MSU students make about 15,000 patient visits each year to the health care facility in Allie Young Hall. But the pace picks up in cold weather, according to Milton Wright, MSU's director of student health services.

"February always is our busiest month because of the flu season," says Wright, a physician's assistant who is employed jointly by MSU and the Morehead Clinic, the group medical practice which supplies physicians to the campus facility under a contract with the University.

The daily patient load at the Caudill Health Clinic jumps from 75 to 80 in December to as many as 125 per day in February. The load fluctuates depending on "what is going around," according to Wright. "Students go to class together, eat together and live in a group setting and the close contact makes it easy for these ailments to make the rounds."

"Usually, we are dealing with healthy young people with common upper respiratory diseases," Wright added. "But the month of February often brings 40 to 50 students each day with temperatures above 102 degrees."

(more)
Winter ailments aren't the only concern at the clinic. Examinations, treatment and emergency first aid are included in the clinic's services. "Other than surgery and broken bones, we can handle most things that happen to our students," Wright explains.

The cost of the clinic's services are included in each semester's regular fees and students pay nothing for individual visits.

Wright and two other physician's assistants see most of the clinic's patients. Dr. Ewell Scott of the Morehead Clinic is the medical director of the campus clinic and is available to students by appointment.

Other staff members include five registered nurses, three MSU nursing students, secretary, stenographer and a laboratory technician.

Sherry Crouch Howard of Bath County is the clinic's lab technician and she runs a full range of lab tests from blood tests for anemia to strep throat cultures.

"We can handle 99 percent of the lab work needed by our patients," Wright concluded.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Rippin', flippin', flutterin', bussin'.

That's a sampling of the jargon that will be tossed around by students and instructors during the Bass Fishing Institute (BFI) at Morehead State University's Academic Athletic Center on Saturday, April 17, and Sunday, April 18.

This language may be alien to some but to serious fishermen, it is important terminology describing successful techniques for catching fish.

Instructors at BFI help participants develop a positive attitude and become aware of the prey and what is going on both above and below the surface of the water.

The weekend workshops teach proper use of tools and technique, presenting the lure to the fish and how to maintain solid contact with the fish after it is hooked.

One of the main objectives of the Institute is to broaden the fishing knowledge of sportsmen of all ages who like to fish as well as those who want to learn how to fish.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- "Tubists are a special breed," according to Kate Hawkins, instructor of English and music at Morehead State University and author of a soon-to-be-released booklet, "Welcome, Music Lovers," honoring tubist Bill Bell.

"The work is appropriately titled because the deep-voiced Bill Bell, considered the best tuba player in the world, opened all his concerts with that line, and was always sure to get a big laugh," said Mrs. Hawkins. "He was fun loving and a real personality and this writing was my labor of love."

Since Bell's death 10 years ago, tubists have pilgrimaged from across the nation to gather in "mass tuba choirs" at his gravesite in Perry, Iowa.

"Bell has inspired many humorous stories through his life and music and I wanted to collect those stories and retell them to the delight of the younger generation," Mrs. Hawkins added.

Bell played with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, under the direction of Arturo Toscanini.

"He attracted people," Mrs. Hawkins said, "and it wasn't his fancy red car. He was a kind person, generous, an individualist, definitely one of a kind."

This year's William Bell Memorial Concert will honor Floyd Cooley, a tubist in MSU's 1967 summer music camp and now soloist for the San Francisco Symphony.
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Phi Beta Mu, the national band honorary fraternity, recently honored the late Dr. Robert Hawkins of Morehead State University during the Ohio and Kentucky Music Educators Conference in Cincinnati.

Eugene Norden, president of Phi Beta Mu and MSU's marching band director, made the posthumous award recognizing Hawkins as "Outstanding Musician and Distinguished Contributor to Kentucky Bands." Accepting on behalf of her husband was Kate Hawkins, instructor of English and music at MSU.

The award cited Dr. Hawkins for more than 40 years of service to public schools, universities and professional music organizations throughout the nation.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- "It has lifted me out of the dumbs and given me hope."

Rosella Traylor of Salt Lick was referring to the recently initiated Displaced Homemaker Program at Morehead State University's Appalachian Development Center.

"It may take me a while, but I am going to get a job," she added. "This program has given me the courage to make the effort."

Funded by CETA, the program helps women who haven't worked much outside the home to get into the job market through on-the-job training, education and job skills counseling.

Although the program also is open to men, the definition of a displaced homemaker is usually limited to a woman's experience. Participants generally are single parents who have a minimum family income because of divorce or death.

"This program has brought me out of a shell, says Alice Nesbitt of Morehead. "It is making us aware of what we can do and is teaching us self esteem and self respect."

Much of the program relies on group discussions in which the 15 women discover more about others and, ultimately, themselves.

"One of the most important aspects is the spirit of the women getting together," says Alice Mark, program coordinator.

Serving Bath, Montgomery and Rowan counties, the program will train three groups of 15 participants before Oct. 1. In addition to training

Serving Bath, Montgomery and Rowan counties, the program will train three groups of 15 participants before Oct. 1. In addition to training and counseling, the program aids the participants in locating and maintaining employment by teaching them how to look for jobs, prepare resumes and cover letters and handle job interviews.

Other program features include discussions with Morehead businesswomen and MSU staff and faculty members and visits to the MSU computer center and Camden-Carroll Library to learn about technology careers and information sources.

In addition, the program helps the women acquire additional education and marketable skills through vocational education, adult education for high school equivalency tests and two-year college programs.

"I feel now as if I can do anything," says Rhonda Tackett of Morehead, who plans to begin an associate degree program in data processing this summer.

"When I was accepted into this program, I felt as though I had a chance," said Donna Bassfor, mother of four. She hopes eventually to become a nurse.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University's Board of Regents Friday approved additional hours of visitation in MSU's men's and women's residence halls, effective next fall.

The policy change extends the privilege of visiting in private rooms of the opposite sex from 18 to 32 hours weekly in most of the campus dormitories. Such visits will continue to be supervised.

In other business, the board:

* Appointed two academic department heads -- Dr. Andrew C. Boston in agriculture and Dr. Jacquelyn McCullough in home economics -- and Dr. Stephen Taylor as executive assistant to the president.

* Approved the elimination of two degree programs -- a bachelor's degree in music teaching and an associate degree in accounting -- because of low enrollments.

* Learned that the University's 1981-82 Annual Giving Campaign has exceeded last year's totals by 16 percent with four months remaining in the fund drive. To date, MSU has received $310,241.80 in private gifts since last July 1.

* Reelected its four officers -- Lloyd Cassity of Ashland as chairman, Jerry Howell Sr. of Jackson as vice chairman, Carol Johnson of Morehead as secretary and John Graham of Morehead as treasurer.

Attending the session were board members Cassity, Howell, Cloyd McDowell of Williamsburg, Judge James Richardson of Owingsville, John Baird of Pikeville, Robert Duncan of Inez, Ethel Foley of Maysville, Billy Joe Hall of Mt. Sterling, Dr. John Duncan of the faculty and Steve O'Connor of the student body.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Omar Othman appreciates the United States but he still plans to go home.

"It's not time to leave my homeland," he says. "If I were going to leave, I would have done it by now."

Othman, who currently serves as a graduate assistant in English at Morehead State University, calls himself an Arab-Israeli. He was born in the Palestinian village of Deir Samit, a town torn by the conflict over a homeland between Israelis and Arabs. From 1948 until 1967, the village was divided by a chain link and barbed wire fence that separated not only Israel and Jordan, but also members of Othman's family.

"My cousins, aunts and uncles are called Palestinians," he says.

Othman has taught for 23 years and is principal of a high school in Jerusalem. He has written two textbooks on learning Arabic—a language he has taught to foreign diplomats and high government officials—and is currently at work on a third.

Othman also is a consultant for a television "docudrama" to be shown in the U.S. that takes place in Deir Samit at the time the fence was torn down in 1967.

He came to Morehead State last fall at the invitation of MSU President Morris L. Norfleet. They met in 1980 when Dr. Norfleet was touring Israel on an educational mission with seven other university presidents.
"This is a new challenge in life, not only for myself, but for my whole family," says Othman, whose wife and four children came with him. "It's not easy to come with a family. But I knew it was a secure place. President Norfleet even sent us a picture of the apartment where we were going to live and a map of the campus."

At MSU, Othman teaches composition to international students of many nationalities.

"They know English but I am helping them with grammar and writing," he says.

Othman also teaches Hebrew and speaks English, French, German, Arabic and Hebrew. He now is studying Spanish.

Othman says he finds the small town atmosphere of Morehead excellent for studying and he enjoys the rural countryside.

"It's quite different," he says, adding that they do have caves and canyons at home, and the crops are figs, peaches and plums instead of tobacco and corn.

A note of sadness creeps into Othman's voice as he speaks of his homeland.

"The Jews say they have no space, that they have suffered for many years and Israel is the land God gave them," he said. "They tell us we have other Arab countries to go to. But I say it also is my homeland. Those who are not extremists show some sympathy."

Othman says most of his friends are Jewish and that there are some attempts to break down the cultural barriers. He is on leave from his job as principal of an Arab school where he has been working toward exchange of teachers with an Israeli school. But, he says, the situation is difficult.

"We try our best to live together. But what is built in three or four years can be destroyed in a minute."
ASCU MEMO

Morehead State University President Morris L. Norfleet has been elected to a two-year term as board chairman of the Jesse Stuart Foundation, Inc.

Organized in 1979, the Foundation is dedicated to preserving the legacy of Jesse Stuart, his birthplace at W-Hollow and the Appalachian way of life.

Primary activities include the preservation of the Stuart homestead in Greenup County and perpetuation of Mr. Stuart's literary works.

Dr. Norfleet previously served as a member of the Foundation's Board of Directors and was among the founders of the organization.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Dr. Sharon Lord, U.S. deputy assistant secretary of defense, will lecture Thursday at 8 p.m. in Morehead State University's Reed Auditorium on "The Women of Appalachia."

Dr. Lord was born and reared in Williamson, W. Va., where she distinguished herself as the first female president of her high school student council and as valedictorian of her graduating class.

Her later achievements include a doctoral degree in educational psychology from Indiana University, Tennessee's "Outstanding Young Woman" in 1973, and the University of Tennessee Alumni Association's "Outstanding Teacher Award," also in 1973.

She served as spokesperson for the National Association for Women in Psychology from 1976 to 1978 and as president of the Regional Appalachian Studies Association in 1978 and 1979. She developed an educational and management consulting firm in 1980 and was appointed to her current position in Washington in 1981.

The lecture is sponsored by MSU's Appalachian Development Center and funded by the Sperry and Hutchinson Foundation as the fifth of a six-part series entitled "Our Mountain Heritage."

The lecture is free and open to the public.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University's recent decision to drop a bachelor's degree program in music will have no effect on its training of music educators, according to Dr. William Bigham, head of MSU's Department of Music.

The University's Board of Regents last week approved the elimination of a bachelor's degree in music with a teaching emphasis on the secondary school level.

"That program has been dropped because the Kentucky Department of Education no longer issues a teaching certificate in music for the secondary level," Dr. Bigham said. "Instead, music teachers for all grades will be certified through bachelor's degree programs in music education."

Dr. Bigham described MSU's music education program as "very healthy" with nearly 150 majors. Students enrolled in the program qualify for a Bachelor of Music Education (BME) degree.

"Because of the similarity of terms involved, we felt it would be helpful to clarify the situation," Dr. Bigham said. "All of our degree programs in music recently were reaccredited by the National Association of Schools of Music (NASM) and we are optimistic about the future."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- How about a field trip in reverse?

That's exactly what happens in Morehead State University's Executive-in-Residence series, according to Dr. Jack Peters, assistant professor of management.

"Four executives from regional corporations visit our classrooms each semester, and they have the choice of either an informal 'rap'session or a workshop," says Dr. Peters. "Depending on the topic, we've had as many as 100 students and faculty members attend."

The program was designed to enhance each student's education. "We open doors for potential interviews and jobs," Dr. Peters added, "but that's not where our primary focus lies."

The series was developed in 1979 by MSU's School of Business and Economics in cooperation with Ashland Oil, Inc., at the recommendation of MSU President Morris L. Norfleet. Thus far, it has produced only "good vibrations" from the guest speakers and participants, according to Dr. Peters.

"It helps our students better understand the field of work they are preparing for, what's expected of them and what the job actually entails," says Dr. Peters, "and they come away with a better-self-image. It also increases and improves our relationship with various businesses in the area, a two-way street in which we provide them with potential human resources and, at the same time, let them know what we're doing."

(more)
Each semester, of the four executives that visit the classroom, there always is at least one representative from Ashland Oil and Armco Steel in Ashland. Other firms have included IBM, Browning Manufacturing, Falcon Coal, American Standard, Bache and AT and T Long Lines.

Additional information on the Executive-in-Residence program is available from Dr. Peters at MSU, UPO 818, Morehead, KY 40351. The telephone number is (606) 783-2164.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- "Women have been involved in the development of this planet since the beginning, but they've been left out of most history books." Speaking was Dr. Broadus Jackson, professor of history at Morehead State University, who maintains that most people are not aware of women's contributions. But MSU students are learning about their female ancestors in a class titled "Herstory: Women and America."

The course covers American history from 1492 to the present, focusing on the role played by women in the settlement of the colonies, the Revolution, the Civil War and other major events.

"Women helped to build our educational system and our social structure," Dr. Jackson says. "And they've been involved in all this country's wars--Harriet Tubman, a black woman, led hundreds of slaves north to freedom during the Civil War."

There are many female leaders in America's past, among them Abigale Adams, wife of John Adams, who fought for women's rights from the colonial period to 1790, and Ann Hutchinson, who "took issue with the basic doctrine of the Puritan church and male domination," according to Dr. Jackson.

Farther back in time, during most of ancient history, "Women actually controlled everything; they owned the crude farms and men took orders from them," explains Dr. Jackson. "But all this changed when couples begun to pair off into families. Man begun to think of woman as his property; he seized control and has had it ever since."

(more)
Women's fight to regain control of their lives is also covered in the course, including such topics as the right to vote, birth control rights, and the struggle for ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment.

Dr. Jackson says women and minorities have been neglected by writers of history books because they have been seen as unimportant. "But they are important, and what they have done for this country is important. To gain an understanding of our past, we need a knowledge of what women have been doing during the last 200 years."

Debbie Banks, Whitesburg junior, says "Herstory" is the first class she has taken that concentrates on women. "The most important thing I have learned is how women have always been taken for granted as the weaker sex," she says. "And that all we should strive to be is a mother. It makes me feel good to know that women have been doing important things for years and years."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Dr. Ted. L. Crosthwait of Frankfort, who served three times as Morehead State University's alumni president, will be honored with MSU's 1982 Founders Day Award for University Service.

The presentation will be made during MSU's Founders Day Convocation and Awards Ceremony at 10:20 a.m. on Thursday, March 18, as the University celebrates the 60th anniversary of its establishment as a state institution.

Dr. Crosthwait, a former school superintendent in Bardstown and Rowan County, also was an administrator in the Louisville city schools. He served from 1970 to 1976 as executive secretary of the Kentucky Teachers Retirement System.

The Morehead native served three one-year terms as national president of the MSU Alumni Association and received the University's "Outstanding Alumnus Award" in 1968. He holds two degrees from MSU.

Dr. Crosthwait and his brother, Harold, donated 52 acres of forested lakefront property at Cave Run Lake in 1975 for the establishment of MSU's Crosthwait Outdoor Education Center.

Dr. Crosthwait also served as the chairman of MSU's first University-wide fund raising drive during 1980-81. The campaign produced nearly $268,000 in private gifts.

"The University is privileged to honor such a dedicated educator and longtime supporter," said MSU President Morris L. Norfleet. "From his days on campus as a student to the present, Ted Crosthwait has served the University with distinction and unwavering devotion."

The other major event of the observance of MSU's birthday will be a 7 a.m. Fellowship Breakfast in the University Center Cafeteria.

All Founders Day activities are open to the public.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Urbie Green, often described as "the most versatile of all top-ranking trombonists," will be the guest artist at Morehead State University's "Jazz Clinic '82," scheduled March 18-20.

Green, recipient of the National Academy of Arts and Sciences "Most Valuable Player" award, has 25 albums to his credit. He toured with Gene Krupa and Woody Herman and has backed up such artists as Billie Holiday, Aretha Franklin, Louis Armstrong, Dizzy Gillespie and Dionne Warwick.

The MSU Jazz Ensemble will perform with Green at 8 p.m. in Duncan Recital Hall on Friday, March 19. Admission is $5 for the general public and $2 for MSU students with ID cards.

The clinic kicks off Thursday, March 18, with a concert by MSU jazz combos at 8 p.m.

Activities on Friday include performances by the MSU Jazz Ensemble II, Percussion Ensemble, Jazz Vocal Ensemble and high school jazz ensembles throughout the day.

Performances on Saturday include the MSU Guitar Ensemble, "Jazz Bones" and high school ensembles.

All concerts during the three-day event will be presented in Duncan Recital Hall.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Winning by the largest margin ever in a state championship tournament, Morehead State University's individual events speech team continues to break records.

In the recent state championships at Western Kentucky University, MSU competitors finished first in seven of nine events and won second in the other two, giving the team the largest number of individual state champs in the tournament's history.

Coached by Chip Letzgus, instructor of speech, the MSU squad also had a record number of finalists, surpassing the other seven college teams combined.

In addition, Rachel Holloway, Morehead junior, established a tournament record for the most individual state titles won in a single year with five.

Individual MSU results included:

*Persuasion -- Lori Glass, Parkersburg, W. Va. junior, second; Rachel Holloway, third; Belinda Stambough, West Liberty junior, fourth.

*Informative Speaking -- Holloway, first; Donna Totich, Morehead junior, second; Keith Murphy, Grayson sophomore, third.

*After Dinner Speaking -- Daryl Slusher, Morehead sophomore, first; Nanci Gabbard, Ft. Thomas senior, second; Sally Ray, Frankfort junior, fourth; Helen Curtis, England freshman, fifth; Stambough, sixth.

*Rhetorical Criticism -- Stambough, first; Holloway, second; Joe Hansen, Cincinnati senior, third; Totich, sixth.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Army Col. Leland J. Holland, a former Iranian hostage, will be the featured speaker for Morehead State University's 1982 Founders Day on Thursday, March 18.

He will address a 10:20 a.m. Convocation and Awards Ceremony in Button Auditorium as part of the observance of MSU's 60th anniversary as a state institution of higher education.

The program is free and open to the public. It will include the presentation of the 1982 Founders Day Award for University Service to Dr. Ted L. Crosthwait of Frankfort.

Col. Holland, a native of Illinois and a graduate of the University of Nebraska, was serving as Army attache at the American embassy in Tehran when he and other embassy staff members were seized by a mob on Nov. 4, 1979, in an incident which dominated world news for more than a year. They were released Jan. 20, 1981.

He received the Army's highest peacetime award, the Distinguished Service Medal, for his conduct during and after the Iranian revolution. His captivity included nearly eight months of solitary confinement and the Army awarded him its Defense Meritorious Service Medal for the hostage ordeal.

"Founders Day is an exciting event at Morehead State University and we are looking forward to sharing the observance with our special guests and our other friends," said MSU President Morris L. Norfleet. "This year's program has special significance because of the 60th anniversary."
The other major event in the day-long celebration will be a Fellowship Breakfast at 7 a.m. in the University Center Cafeteria. The breakfast program will recognize the religious heritage of MSU as described by Dr. John Ridgway of Lexington, a 1931 graduate. His account of the school's early days is being published by the MSU Foundation later this month under the title of "The Miracle of Morehead."
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Education on avoiding a legal crisis is one of the basic needs of a newly-widowed woman, according to Mary Brannon, chairperson of the Kentucky Widow-to-Widow Network.

She made the comments at a recent conference sponsored by Morehead State University's chapter of the American Association of University Women (AAUW).

"A widow's needs can best be met by other widows," Ms. Brannon said. "This is the purpose of the program, to get widows together so they can share their common experiences."

Kentucky is among four states chosen by the AAUW for the program. MSU members are starting a network for Rowan County widows and widowers.

"A woman who has just lost her husband needs immediate assistance from the time of death through the funeral," said Ms. Brannon. "She needs help during the emotional crisis and the readjustment period, which usually lasts a year or more. The network can supply this help, information on government programs available to widows, and the on-going support of others who share these problems."

Widows also need a social outlet because, in her words, "when you bury your husband, you often bury your friends."

"Our culture is couple-oriented and there just isn't a place for an old woman alone."

Although widowers share the loneliness, they do not have the same readjustment problems because their life hasn't been centered on home and family, according to Ms. Brannon.

(more)
"They have their jobs to go back to and they have the support of their co-workers," she added.

But widowers do need a "sympathetic ear" which is available through the widow-to-widow network.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- What is done for the academically gifted child who becomes frustrated when his abilities exceed the challenges presented?

Few schools in Kentucky identify academically gifted students, according to Dr. Wayne Brazell, adjunct professor of education at Morehead State University.

"Only 50 school districts in the state have special personnel and programs designed for the gifted child," he explains.

In response, MSU's School of Education is sponsoring "Project Challenge" this summer. It is designed to give academically gifted sixth, seventh and eighth graders an opportunity to broaden their scholastic and recreational experiences.

"We want to give them a chance to expand their thoughts and ideas," Dr. Brazell explains, "and we hope to inspire them sufficiently to reach their individual potential."

During the two-week program, participants will spend at least 90 minutes a day in each of four academic areas, including computer science, natural sciences, English and creative writing and cinematography.

"In addition, we have scheduled the time from 6 p.m. until 8 p.m. for students to concentrate on those areas, either recreational or academic, as they choose," Dr. Brazell added.

(more)
The recreational component will consist of classes in swimming, diving, canoeing, bowling and ceramics, with field trips to Cave Run Lake and Carter Caves State Resort Park.

The program is limited specifically to those junior high students who have been identified as gifted by their respective schools.

The total cost of the program is $250, which includes tuition, room, board, instructional materials, recreation and health services and insurance.

A deposit of $25 is required by May 15 with the balance due on May 30.

Additional information on "Project Challenge" is available from Dr. Wayne Brazell, MSU, UPO 726, Morehead, KY 40351. The telephone number is (606) 783-2263.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Karen Hammons teaches college students and kindergarten age children--at the same time--in Morehead State University's Child Development Laboratory.

Operated as lab for students in home economics, education and nursing who need classroom experience to meet graduation requirements, the program offers "educare" to 16 three- to five-year-old children.

"Educare is different from traditional day care in that we teach the children basic skills such as understanding the calendar," says Ms. Hammons, instructor of education at MSU, adding that she recently explained the concept of gravity to the children.

"A few days later, I told them to jump up in the air and stay there," she explains. "They laughed and said they couldn't do that. When I ask why, one little boy said because of gravity. You'd be surprised how much little children can understand."

In addition to teaching the children, Ms. Hammons prepares MSU students for their time in the classroom.

"Kindergarten student teachers work here four hours a day for eight weeks," she says. "For every hour they spend with the children, they spend three hours with me planning what they will do in the classroom and getting prepared for it."

She also conducted a "parents' night" last semester with the help of the students.

(more)
"They learn everything here they will need to know to teach kindergarten effectively," she added.

Children are accepted for the program on a first-come, first-served basis each semester, and must make a one-semester commitment to enroll.
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Kimberley Jan Harris, Wurtland sophomore, has been named 1982 Military Ball Queen at Morehead State University.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Was Vietnam a "War Without Heroes"?

"I don't think so," says Dr. John Hanrahan, professor of history at Morehead State University. "I think there were many heroes."

However, "War Without Heroes" is the title of the photo exhibit Dr. Hanrahan helped bring to MSU's Claypool-Young Gallery and which features photographs of the Vietnam Conflict by David Douglas Duncan. Two lectures also will be held in conjunction with the show.

The exhibit is on loan from the Marine Corps Historical Center. Douglas, who served in the Marine Corps and also photographed World War II and the Korean War says in the introduction to the show:

"I wanted to show what war does to a man. I wanted to show something of the comradeship that binds men together when they are fighting a common peril."

The show will be displayed through March 23. The gallery is open from 8 a.m. until 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday.

On Tuesday, March 23, at 7 p.m. in Room 111 of Claypool-Young Art Building, David Bartlett, assistant professor of art, will lecture on "War Photography" and Dr. Hanrahan will speak on "The Vietnam Veterans Build Their Own War Memorial." The program is free and open to the public.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- At age 12 he was playing trumpet at churches with his father.

By the time he was in college he was a "self employed" trumpet instructor.

Now he is steadily employed in a business where work comes very inconsistently.

The business is professional music, and the man is Greg Wing, a 1976 graduate of Morehead State University, who returned to the campus recently to instruct in a band clinic.

The Covington native received a bachelors degree in music education with a major in trumpet and a minor in jazz. He then attended Indiana University, receiving his master's in trumpet in May, 1981. It was at IU that Wing met the man who would shape him into a successful musician, William Adam.

Adam was Wing's instructor, and according to Wing, taught him the key to success.

"Always be a gentleman and remember that the best songs have not been written yet," said Wing, "the world is yours to take."

Greg Wing took that advice and has since performed with such notables as Elvis Presley, Crystal Gayle, Lynn Anderson, and the Spinners.

He recently toured two seasons with Ringling Brothers, Barnum and Bailey Circus and The Ice Follies. His broadway show experience includes "Oklahoma," "Hello Dolly," "My Fair Lady," and "Tea for Two."

(more)
But his crowning achievement came when he was engaged by the Buddy Rich Big Band for a stint playing lead trumpet.

"I was thinking positive while I was at MSU," said Wing, "I always knew I would play professionally." Perhaps it was that positive attitude which impressed his instructors at IU, because when "People" magazine contacted them about a feature on 1981 graduates, the magazine was referred to Wing who was playing in Las Vegas. The feature was published in the July 19, 1981 issue of "People."

"I went to Las Vegas to be a professional trumpet player and I will be," says Wing.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- "From Kitchen to Career" is the title of a recent best seller that also describes the focus for Morehead State University's Displaced Homemaker Program.

Implemented by MSU's Appalachian Development Center and funded by CETA, the program provides guidance and training to help women bridge the gap generated by numerous years spent as mother and housewife without the outside experiences necessary to effectively compete in the job market.

Serving Bath, Montgomery, and Rowan counties, the program is training three groups of 15 participants before Oct. 1. In addition to personal guidance, job preparedness skills and on-the-job experiences, the program aids participants in locating and maintaining employment by teaching them how and where to look for jobs, how to prepare credentials and cover letters, and how to effectively handle job interviews.

The first group of women to complete the course included Rosella Traylor of Salt Lick who commented that the program, in addition to providing her with training, also had provided her with the determination for an successful job search.

"It may take me a while," she said, "but I am going to get a job, and I know that it takes courage to make the effort."

Another participant, Alice Nesbitt of Morehead, remarked that the program had improved her self image by making her more aware of her own potential.

(more)
"It has made us aware of the many different things we can do," she said.

The program curriculum includes discussions with Morehead businesswomen and Morehead State University faculty and staff as well as visits to the University's computer center and library.

Alice Mark, program coordinator, explained that one of the most valuable aspects of the program is that it provides women with an opportunity to share experiences and, as a result, to discover common reactions to their life situations and to share methods of coping with the stress created by their individual situation.

In addition to the initial three-week training session, the program helps women acquire additional education and marketable skills through vocational education, adult education and two-year college programs.

Rhonda Tackett, another recent graduate of the program plans to enter an associate degree program in data processing this summer. Donna Basford, mother of four, will enter a nursing program.

The program is open to any person in the three-county area who qualifies as a displaced homemaker, according to CETA guidelines, and who is financially eligible. Information on CETA eligibility can be acquired from the Kentucky Bureau For Manpower Services.

Additional information about the Displaced Homemaker Program is available from MSU's Appalachian Development Center at (606) 783-4731.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Army Col. Leland Holland, a former Iranian hostage, told a Morehead State University Founders Day audience here Thursday that former President Carter's rescue plan "would have worked."

Noting that the hostages knew no details of the rescue attempt until their release, the military intelligence officer said:

"The plan would have worked. It was a good plan. But it just wasn't meant to be."

Holland recounted his 444 days of captivity, including more than seven months of solitary confinement. He said he occupied his time with physical exercise, reliving his youth and mentally "building a house." He referred to the period of isolation as "a time when they thought so much of me that they gave me a private room."

"I was moved 24 times and we were always blindfolded, handcuffed to either the car seat or to another person," Holland recalled. "We were moved all over the country but we never knew exactly where we were, most of the time."

Concerning present conditions in Iran, Holland said the Ayatullah Khomeini is "the only piece of glue that holds it together."

He concluded:

"I bear no grudges against the Iranians. They're not all bad. And, as for the matter of hostage compensation, the American people don't owe me a dime."

During the ceremony, State Rep. Clarence Noland of Irvine commissioned Holland as a Kentucky Colonel.

The 1982 Founders Day Award for University Service was presented to Dr. Ted Crosthwait of Frankfort, three-time president of the MSU Alumni Association.

The daylong event recognized the 60th anniversary of MSU's establishment as a state institution.
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Larry Keenan, associate professor of music at Morehead State University will present a faculty recital on Tuesday, March 30.

The program will consist of works by Liszt, Carden, Bach and Albeniz performed on piano and synthesizer.

Keenan also will present this program in Memorial Hall at the University of Kentucky as a benefit for the National Federation of Music Clubs on April 1.

The 8:15 p.m. concert in Duncan Recital Hall is free and open to the public.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- The water used by thousands of Eastern Kentuckians goes to college each month.

Samples are sent to Morehead State University's Water Testing Laboratory where tests are conducted for 30 area water systems, including Hazard, Jenkins, Olive Hill, Sandy Hook, Greenup, Prestonsburg and Owingsville, according to Dr. Ted Pass, lab director and professor of biology.

"We also test the University's water and the water here in Morehead," he adds.

Required by law, the tests check for bacteria which may indicate disease-causing organisms in public drinking water supplies.

Although city samples account for the majority of the testing, MSU's state-certified lab also tests water from private sources, such as wells or cistern, for individuals.

To date, the lab has processed water samples from 40 Kentucky counties, including a few in Western Kentucky.

Dr. Pass explains the test: "Basically, what we look for are coliforms, bacteria native to mammals' intestinal tracts."

"While the coliforms themselves are relatively harmless, they show whether the water may be contaminated by human or animal wastes," he explains. "So, they are a useful indicator of the possible presence of disease-producing bacteria, such as those causing typhoid fever, dysentery, cholera or hepatitis virus."
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Miss Kentucky of 1981, Miss Texas of 1981 and Miss MSU of 1981 plus a far Eastern dancer will headline the 1982 Miss MSU Scholarship Pageant at Morehead State University on April 14 and 15.

Twenty MSU coeds will be vying for the title of Miss MSU and the right to represent the University in the Miss Kentucky Pageant next summer in Louisville.

Activities begin at 7:30 p.m. each evening in MSU's Button Auditorium with the crowning of the 1981 Little Miss MSU scheduled on Wednesday, April 14, and the crowning of Miss MSU on Thursday, April 15.

Ten of the contestants will present talent on the first night while the others are judged in swimsuit and on-stage personality. The roles will be reversed for the second night.

Appearing both nights is Sheri Colleen Copeland of Benton, Miss Kentucky of 1981. The 5-5, 105-pound vocalist attends Murray State University. She also served as Miss Purchase District of 1978, Miss Paducah of 1979 and Miss Green River Valley of 1980.

Highlighting the special guest appearances on Thursday night will be Sheri Ryman, Miss Texas of 1981 and fourth runner-up to Miss America 1982. She is accomplished in gymnastics, jazz and tap dance, ballet, and was the preliminary talent winner at the Miss America Pageant in 1981. Miss Texas is currently attending North Texas State University and majoring in Industrial Distribution.
Miss MSU of 1981, Tammy Jo Worthington, will be a special guest both evenings and will display her talent. Miss Worthington is a native of Greenup.

Also scheduled for appearances both evenings are "Forerunner" an MSU student musical group, and the MSU Jazz Ensemble.

Emcee for the pageant will be Far Eastern dancer, Sher Patrick. Formerly the 1979 Miss Ohio and third runner-up to Miss America, Sher is internationally known as a speaker, dancer and entertainer.

Admission is $3 on Wednesday evening and $3.50 on Thursday. Tickets go on sale on the MSU campus on April 5. Ticket information is available from MSU's Bureau of Student Affairs at (606) 783-3213.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Two freshmen from Lewis County have been honored by Phi Kappa Phi National Honor Society at Morehead State University.

Tammy Jo Liles is a graduate of Lewis County High School and is majoring in biology. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James F. Liles of Garrison.

Elizabeth Jean Holder is a graduate of Lewis County High School and is majoring in medical technology. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. V. Holder, Jr., of Vanceburg.

Phi Kappa Phi recognizes superior academic achievement by freshmen students who obtain a 4.0 grade point average.
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Luann Zwieg of Fox Lake, Wis., has been initiated into the Pi Gamma Mu International Honor Society in social science at Morehead State University.

Zwieg, a graduate of Waupun Senior High School, is majoring in medical technology and biology.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd H. Zwieg of Route 2, Fox Lake.
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University's mining advisory committee met recently to review plans for MSU's new four-year degree program and other facets of the mining technology curriculum.

Committee Chairman Cloyd McDowell of Williamsburg, a member of the MSU Board of Regents, described the daylong session as "very informative."

William E. Clayton, director of miner education for the Kentucky Department of Mines and Minerals, told the committee that the demand for mining training in Eastern Kentucky continues to be heavy, particularly for mine foremen and inexperienced miners.

Tom Kessler of the U.S. Mine Safety and Health Administration moderated a discussion on cooperative ties between education and the mining industry. He challenged MSU and other institutions and mine operators to maintain and strengthen their working relationships.

Dr. Charles Derrickson, dean of MSU's School of Applied Sciences and Technology, responded by saying that mining technology should be removed from its "academic shell" and given more exposure with mining industry management.

Forrest Cameron, coordinator of MSU's mining technology program, and Sam Kumar, assistant professor of mining technology, reported on the development of MSU's bachelor's degree in mining, reclamation and energy studies and also on the activities of MSU's Energy Research Laboratory.

(more)
"In addition to technical aspects, we also teach our students about communications, personal interaction, the problems of labor and management, individual safety and regulations in order to provide them with an understanding of each area," Cameron added.

Also attending were committee members Michael Vallez, vice president for operations, MAPCO, Inc. Inez; Frank Gaddy of Gaddy Engineering Co., Huntington, W. Va.; Bobby Dukes of Greenville, United Mine Workers of America; and Bobby Coburn, Addington Brothers Coal Co., Ashland.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Gov. John Y. Brown Jr. has declared March 28-April 3 as Cooperative Education Week, according to Dr. Wayne Morella, director of field career experiences at Morehead State University.

Cooperative education is career training through off-campus employment to provide students with "hands-on learning" experiences.

Dr. Morella says the special week is intended to honor those involved in cooperative learning--employers, students, vocational school, college and university co-op education personnel.

During the week, Morella and several MSU coordinators will be attending the annual meeting of the Cooperative Education Association of Kentucky.

MSU has 15 cooperative education students in a variety of fields ranging from work in hospitals and Social Security offices to the Kentucky Horse Park, Dr. Morella reported.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Five lithographic prints by Morehead State University faculty member Robert Franzini have been selected for exhibition in the Richard B. Russell Federal Building and U.S. Courthouse in Atlanta.

The assistant professor of art submitted a series of prints in response to a notice about the search for art for the new building. "I've sent work to national competitions before. They were rejected," he said. "I'm lucky this time because art quality is more subjective than objective."

Franzini teaches figure drawing, oil painting and printmaking at MSU.

The prints, which were chosen by judges from the National Endowment for the Arts on behalf of the General Services Administration, depict visual images of the Biblical character of Job.

Franzini used a similar theme for his graduate project at the University of Iowa in a book he printed and bound by hand.

He was an undergraduate at Stanford University in California heading toward a career in architecture when he discovered the art to which he is now committed.

"I walked into the print shop, inhaled the ambience of the shop, and that was it," he recalls. Franzini studied with two master printmakers before he began teaching.

(more)
Arriving at MSU in the fall of 1980 to develop MSU's printmaking program, Franzini also received a faculty research grant to study a technique he devised to use printmaking ink as the drawing material.

"For me, the technique was very natural," he said. "It is a very simple and direct technique and I'm surprised nothing had been written about it before. But technique is not as important as the result. What is important is expression."

One of his works utilizing this technique was included in the prestigious Boston Printmakers exhibit.

Franzini recently had a one-man show in his hometown of Palo Alto, Cal., and has exhibits going up in Ashland, at Marshall University in Huntington and at the Lexington Opera House, among others.

Some of these will be two-man shows exhibiting the art of Franzini and the photographs of MSU colleague David Bartlett. They also have collaborated on a photoetching workshop.

Franzini cited teaching as a primary commitment.

"If an artist works at a university, his first priority should be teaching. I feel it is wrong for an artist to feel a job is just a meal ticket."

"I like teaching," he concluded. "There's energy there. If you are alone, you are missing the energy which students and other people provide."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Higher education and vocational education can work together as demonstrated by a successful machine tool program at Morehead State University.

The joint project developed in 1980 when the Rowan County Vocational School wanted to start a machine shop program through CETA but didn't have facilities. MSU, which was interested in working with a CETA program, had the space.

"We've come a long way," said Phil Showalter, instructor of the program. "In July 1989, our lab was an indoor parking lot."

Since then, walls, heat, lights and equipment have added to create a safe, clean work area.

The equipment came from various sources. Some was purchased with CETA money--although the bulk of the funding is used to pay students as they learn--and some machinery was donated by other vocational schools and MSU.

One task of the students is to rebuild and refurbish the equipment, some of which is over 50 years old. Equipment is still being added as it becomes available.

"But what we don't have, MSU does in its machine shop, so by using the two shops, it works," said Clifford Wells, coordinator of the vocational school.

Students, who are usually 18 to 25 years of age, are referred by the Kentucky Bureau for Manpower Services and are provided with training to become machine tool operators.

"And that is something no one can take away from them," Wells added.

(more)
There have been other changes in the program since it began. The number of students has been increased from 12 to 18 and there has been a shift to "open-entry, open-exit" enrollment, allowing students to enter the program and leave at any skill level.

Loretta DeHart of Morehead, one of four women now in the program, says she is enjoying the learning of a new skill.

"I like to work with my hands, said DeHart, mother of two children. "I've learned a lot here," adding that she would forego further training if she received a job offer.

The "open-entry, open-exit" approach would allow her slot to be filled by one of the people currently waiting to enter the program. Currently, most students are from Rowan and Bath counties, although the program is open to people in 20 counties in Eastern Kentucky.

Students are evaluated by their competency in machine operation skills, advancing from one skill level to the next. This flexibility allows students to learn at their own pace. The training is supplemented with classroom instruction.

"The beauty of this program is that we can tailor their training program to teach people whatever skills they will need," Showalter said. The program has the capability to work with local industry to train workers for specific jobs. This is especially helpful to students who wish to stay closer to home.

Of the 12 students in last year's class, 11 completed the program and nine were placed in jobs. Wells said the others had job offers in other locations, but wanted to stay close to home.

"I saw the immediate benefits of this program," said Wells. "We placed people in productive jobs. "We put a person in a CETA program and at the end of that program, they are skilled and can go into the labor market and become a taxpayer."
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Dr. Charles Payne and Dr. William Falls weren't satisfied with the textbook used in the introductory Physical Science classes at Morehead State University--so they wrote their own!

The result of their dissatisfaction is now in its third printing by the Wm. C. Brown Company. The textbook has been adopted by MSU and more than 130 other colleges and universities from New York to California and Texas to Canada. The entitled "Physical Science: Principles and Applications," book is an unqualified success.

After spending three years writing the original edition, Dr Payne and Dr. Falls didn't stop to rest on their laurels. In the changing world of science, one has to keep up and that is "a never ending problem," according to Dr. Payne.

"We are always on the lookout for something new," added Dr. Falls, coordinator of MSU's Center for Science Education.

In its 20-plus chapters, the book covers traditional topics like Newton's law of motion, molecules and basic electricity as well as current topics such as the space shuttle "Columbia," acid rain and the eruptions of Mt. St. Helens.

Dr. Falls wrote the chapters on physics, physical geography and environmental problems and Dr. Payne covered the chapters on chemistry, astronomy and geology.

Along with the 630-page text, the pair also compiled a 135-page instructor's manual which gives hints on demonstrations and sample examinations.

Considering the long hours and hard work which went into the project, the reviews they have received are particularly satisfying.

"The book is excellently organized-ranging from the very basics to difficult scientific concepts," said Bruce D. Dod of Wayland Baptist College in Texas.

But the world of science doesn't pause and, to keep their book current, Dr. Payne and Dr. Falls have started working on the fourth edition.
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Rocky Hardymon of Tollesboro will present his senior piano recital on Wednesday, April 14, at Morehead State University.

He will perform works by Bach, Chopin and Khatchaturian.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University is modifying its summer school calendar for the benefit of teachers and students in the public schools, MSU President Morris L. Norfleet has announced.

MSU's first summer session, originally scheduled to begin June 1 for a five-week period, has been delayed until June 7 and shortened to four weeks. The term ends June 30.

"This change resulted from a survey of area school superintendents who expressed concern for their teachers who would not be able to enroll in summer graduate classes during the first session because the public school calendars have been extended to cover this winter's snow days," Dr. Norfleet explained.

"We are pleased that this modification will allow teachers and other public school personnel to enroll in our first summer term. The new starting date also will benefit this year's high school graduates who choose to enroll in summer school."

Dr. Norfleet said the calendar change would not affect Summer II which opens July 6 and closes Aug. 6. It will consist of five weeks of classes.

In other summer school matters, MSU reported that it had decided "reluctantly" to end sponsorship of Cave Run Lake Musical Theatre, effective immediately.

"The University is proud of the quality productions in the past three seasons and we are deeply appreciative of the cooperation and support of all who were involved," Dr. Norfleet said.
He continued:

"However, the combination of declining attendance and student interest in this period of financial hardship makes it impossible to justify our continued budgetary support of the theatre activity."

The MSU chief executive said last year's productions were subsidized in excess of $24,000.
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Ancient Chinese culture is coming to the foothills of Eastern Kentucky.

A Chinese art collection from the National Palace Museum in Taiwan will be publicly exhibited for the first time in America at Morehead State University, starting April 13.

Spanning 3,000 years of Chinese history, the 58-piece collection will be formally given to MSU's Department of Art at the show's opening.

The collection includes replicas of masterpieces chosen from the museum's 600,000 works. Included are hanging silk landscape paintings, bronze utilitarian vessels, porcelains and calligraphy from ancient Chinese scrolls.

Richard Wang, curator of exhibitions at the Republic of China's National Palace Museum, will officially donate the collection to MSU on Tuesday, April 13, at 7:30 p.m. in Room 111 of the Claypool-Young Art Building.

Following the ceremony, Wang will present a brief slide-illustrated talk on the palace museum's history.

At 8:30 p.m., a formal exhibit opening and reception will be held in the gallery. Music will be provided by the MSU music faculty and complimentary catalogs of the exhibit will be available.

The opening activities and exhibit are free to the public. The gallery is open weekdays from 8 a.m. until 4 p.m.
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Offices will be closed and classes dismissed at Morehead State University on Friday, April 9, in observance of Good Friday.

Offices reopen and classes resume at 8 a.m. on Monday, April 12.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- "Buildings don't waste energy," says Suzanne Theis, coordinator of Morehead State University's Energy Management Assistance Program (EMAP), "people waste energy."

EMAP is part of the Kentucky Department of Energy's conservation plan with a focus on energy conservation in industrial and commercial businesses throughout Eastern Kentucky, upon request and at no cost.

Servicing 22 counties within designated areas of the state, Theis says she does "a lot of driving to cover about 10,000 square miles. Pike county alone is 700 miles square so I'm kept real busy."

"All eight universities are participating, with only three on a full-time basis," she continued. Incidentally, Theis is the only woman.

"A staff of technical, engineering, financial and management personnel is available at all times upon request, at no cost, to assist the public in developing an energy conservation or energy management program for any facilities," Theis added.

MSU's program involves Bath, Boyd, Breathitt, Carter, Elliott, Fleming, Floyd, Greenup, Johnson, Knott, Lawrence, Letcher, Lewis, Magoffin, Martin, Mason, Menifee, Montgomery, Morgan, Pike, Rowan, and Wolfe.

"Any savings from energy conservation will make a company more profitable and competitive," according to Theis. Energy costs are projected to increase significantly, with industrial electric costs expected to jump 45 percent in constant dollars, commercial natural gas 80 percent, fuel oil 29 percent, and industrial coal 63 percent.
"It would be logical to consider energy costs in relation to net profits," Theis added. "By conserving now, you could achieve an increased profit margin with lower costs. Don't wait till the bills come in at the end of the month--conserve now."

Theis says EMAP handles anything from an energy use survey/walk-through audit of businesses, to energy information group talks, workshops and seminars.

"Businesses are showing more concern and interest which explains our heavy case load."

"We service all types of businesses, large or small, and respond to requests," Theis added.

Additional information is available from Suzanne Theis, Energy Management Assistance Program, MSU, UPO 1205, Morehead, KY 40351. The telephone is (606) 783-4652.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- So you're ready to become a writer.

You've installed a new typewriter ribbon. Your scrawled notes are neatly piled and filed. Your mind is full of stories. Close at hand are thesaurus, dictionary, grammar stylebook, correction fluid and a pot of black coffee.

There's only one thing missing---the 1982 Morehead State University Writers Workshop.

Scheduled May 17-28, the workshop includes discussions and critiques by writers from several fields, from writing about machinery to armored warriors and strange beasts.

Professional writers on the workshop faculty will include Don Bush, Sr., senior technical editor at McDonnell Aircraft in St. Louis; Milford Reid of the Louisville Courier-Journal; Andrew J. Offutt, science fiction and fantasy writer from Haldeman; and Barbara Smith, Appalachian scholar, poet, novelist and humanities chairperson at Alderson Broaddus College in Philippi, W. Va.

Also featured in workshop activities will be former MSU writers and workshop students, including Ann Shelby, freelancer and instructor of English at the University of Kentucky; and Judy Martt, information specialist at Ashland Oil.

Dr. Donald H. Cunningham and Dr. Marc Glasser, professors of English, will be directing the workshop. Participants may receive three semester hours of college credit.

Additional information is available from Dr. Cunningham, MSU, UPO 684, Morehead, KY 40351. The telephone is (606) 783-2136. Housing information is available from MSU's Division of Student Housing at (606) 783-3323.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University is hosting a day-long seminar in reality therapy on Thursday, April 15, in Baird Music Hall.

Dr. William Glasser, author and lecturer, will discuss reality therapy and the ideas in his new book, "Stations of the Mind." Dr. Glasser is the originator of the pioneering concepts of reality therapy, schools without failure and positive addiction.

Sponsored by MSU's Department of Leadership and Foundations and Office of Instructional Systems, the workshop is geared toward public school teachers and counselors and those working in the areas of mental health, corrections and rehabilitation.

Registration, which begins at 9 a.m., is $25 for the public and $13 for students.

Additional information is available from Dr. Jean Wilson at (606) 783-2261.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Some people have trouble finding one skill on which to concentrate.

But Steve Graves, whose sculpture "Obstacle I" recently was erected at Morehead State University, has had trouble deciding which of his many talents to pursue.

Graves, a sophomore of Amelia, Ohio, is a musician, cabinetmaker and writer, as well as an artist.

"I've always had a bunch of outlets for my energy," says the Maysville native.

"In high school, I did a small amount of sculpture, but basically I was involved in politics and my art was really clouded," he explained, adding that he emphasized on music.

After graduating from high school during the Viet Nam War, Graves worked as an orderly at a hospital for two years in Cincinnati.

Later, Graves helped reconstruct the town of Washington, near Maysville. There, he built log cabins and concentrated on carpentry and cabinetmaking.

However, Graves felt the need to return to art.

"My grandfather was a Fleming County artist who supported himself with his painting--meagerly. My father was a frustrated artist. That's one of the things that spurred me not to wait," he explains.

"I'm here for the energy," he says. "There is energy in learning and energy in new ideas."

He and his wife, Karen, who is working on a master's in adult continuing education, have a 9-month-old daughter, Katy.

Although his emphasis is on sculpture, Graves draws and writes as well.
For Graves, the basis for everything he does is the "geometry in our environment."

"I use the angles, lines and shapes from our environment. People can relate to them," he explains.

He also uses philosophy in sculpture. "If I want to say something, I have to catch people's attention. Once you have caught their attention with something familiar, then you can teach them something."

Graves calls this "an expansion of awareness through form."

Why did he finally choose sculpture as his vehicle of communication?

"Through sculpture, I have found a more universal language of art."

There is no language barrier in sculpture," he replies.

"Obstacle I" is not Graves' first sculpture, but it is his first public sculpture. It is constructed of eight specially-cut white oak beams held together with nine bolts. Each beam weighs approximately 450 pounds.

The sculpture, which was constructed on location in the mall between Ginger and Rader Halls, was assembled during spring break by Graves and a few friends, who lifted each piece into place.

Graves says he and local representatives of the lumber industry are currently discussing construction of a monument to the wood industry for the people of the area.

"That's one reason I am going into public sculpture," he says.

"Communication with the common folks."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Care of 3- to 5-year-old children should be more than babysitting.

Beverly Cree, chairperson of the Kentucky Child Development Associate (CDA) Forum and director of Morehead State University's CDA program, believes this job is special.

"Teachers need special training so they know they are doing more than babysitting," Ms. Cree says, adding that these years are important in a child's development.

The program, which is federally funded and administered, was initiated in 1975. Participants work in 13 areas of child care, including creating safe and healthy learning environments, improving children's physical and intellectual activities and self-image and helping parents get involved and informed. The program is available to anyone who works with 3- to 5-year-olds in a classroom setting.

"We will work with anyone who wants training if they are willing to pay," Ms. Cree explains. The fee is $1,000 per person, per year.

"This sounds expensive," she adds, adding that all sessions are held on-site and all training is totally individualized. Teachers also can earn six semester hours of college credit through the program and, because the program is nationally based, CDA credentials are recognized outside Kentucky.

The fees help pay for travel expenses, which are substantial since Cree herself travels about 500 miles each week to the 48 counties served by the MSU program.

(more)
Morehead State has the largest program in the state. According to Ms. Cree, 44 teachers in Kentucky have received credentials as of October, 1981.

"Recently we have been getting a lot of people assessed and we hope to have 100 by summer," she says.

Ms. Cree and her four part-time co-workers visit each site monthly, spending the entire day observing and counseling the teachers.

"We meet a lot of people in Kentucky who don't have the training, but who do have a good feeling for what they are doing," she says. "It takes a lot of dedication and determination by the teachers--who usually earn only minimum wage--to enter the program."

Each teacher receives a minimum of six visits, but most require two years of training before they are ready for the assessment required to receive credentials.

"What happens in assessment is really a special part of CDA," Ms. Cree says.

The teacher being assessed is one of four people who will determine whether credentials will be awarded, which helps teach them self-assessment. Others on the assessment team are the teacher's CDA adviser, a regional CDA representative from the main office and a parent or community representative who has compiled comments from other parents. The assessment, which takes an entire day, is based on the teacher's competence.

"This training teaches them to individualize for each child, emphasizing their needs and strengths," Ms. Cree explained. "They learn these principles and how to apply them in the future."

Yes, care of 3- to 5-year-olds is more than babysitting.
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- The Morehead State University Chorus is presenting its spring concert Sunday, April 18, in Duncan Recital Hall.

Under the direction of Vasile Venettozzi, associate professor of music, the group will perform works by Mozart and Bach with a special tribute to John Jacob Niles.

Dr. Wanda Bigham, director of MSU's Office of Instructional Systems, will be guest soloist for the event. Accompanying the group will be Tim Brezeale, Pickens, S.C. junior, on piano; Jay Flippin, associate professor of music, on organ; and Gretchen Goodwin, Louisville sophomore, on piano.

The 3 p.m. concert is free and open to the public.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Dr. Jim Wayne Miller, noted Appalachian writer and scholar, will lecture Thursday, April 29, at 8 p.m. in Morehead State University's Reed Auditorium.

The lecture, "The Future of Appalachian Kentucky," is sponsored by MSU's Appalachian Development Center and funded by a grant from the Sperry and Hutchinson Foundation. It is the last of a six-part series, "Our Mountain Heritage," which has been provided to enrich MSU's Appalachian Studies Program and to help Eastern Kentuckians gain a deeper understanding of their homeland and culture.

Miller is a native of Buncombe County, N.C. and a graduate of Berea College. He holds the distinction of having lived in Germany as a member of the Experiment in International Living and holds a doctorate in German and American literature from Vanderbilt University.

Currently a professor of German at Western Kentucky University, Miller has distinguished himself as a lecturer, writer and scholar. He is the author of more than 20 short stories, 200 poems and numerous essays and articles.

One of the major recurring themes in both Miller's writings and lectures is the "decline of folkways in an industrialized society."

The lecture is free and open to the public.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Ancient Chinese culture arrived Wednesday in the foothills of Eastern Kentucky.

A Chinese art collection from the National Palace Museum in Taiwan went on public display for the first time in America at Morehead State University, running through April 23.

Spanning 3,000 years of Chinese history, the 58-piece collection was formally given to MSU's Department of Art by Richard Wang, curator of exhibitions at the Republic of China's National Palace Museum. The gift is valued at $60,000.

The collection includes replicas of masterpieces chosen from the museum's 600,000 works. Included are hanging silk landscape paintings, bronze utilitarian vessels, porcelains and calligraphy from ancient Chinese scrolls.

"The University is deeply indebted to the people of the Republic of China and the officials of the National Palace Museum for this magnificent gift," said MSU President Morris L. Norfleet, in accepting the collection on behalf of the University. "We will make these beautiful works of art available for exhibition at other colleges and universities throughout the country and the members of our art faculty will have access to them for their classes."

Dr. Norfleet commended Dr. Bill Booth, head of MSU's Department of Art, for his role in securing the collection. Dr. Booth visited Taiwan last fall as a consultant to the National Palace Museum and arranged for the collection to be shown privately last week in New York City during the annual convention of the National Art Education Association.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Jeff Offutt is getting a taste of what may be a very interesting career before he leaves Morehead State University.

The Morehead native is among 29 seniors enrolled in a data processing field project which takes students out of the classroom and into actual work situations around the MSU campus and into community small businesses.

The projects range from Offutt's work with the Department of Industrial Education in robotics to the Appalachian Development Center where Dave Elkins is working with economic information dealing with mining, agriculture and manufacturing in Eastern Kentucky.

Offutt, a math major and data processing minor, spends five to 10 hours a week on the robotics project and, in return, receives class credit and a great deal of experience.

"This is one of the biggest fields," he said about job opportunities in data processing and, concerning robots, he added, "A lot of companies are making a big push towards robotics."

Elkins' job is to take the ADC information on Eastern Kentucky and "put it into their data base so they can have access to it."

"They can analyze it and compare one county to another," the data processing major from Worthington added.

Whether students are working on robots or Eastern Kentucky economics, the bottom line is the same--they are getting an opportunity to get their feet wet in actual work situations.

(more)
The "teacher" of the class, Bonnie Bailey, instructor in data processing, emphasizes this fact.

"In other classes, students are taught what to do. In the field project, they are proving that they got something out of the classroom."

This semester, her students are doing data processing-related work for several academic departments, the MSU Counseling Center, the School of Social Sciences and other campus agencies.

These seniors have put in their classroom hours and soaked up the necessary knowledge. Now, even before they leave MSU with a college degree, they are experiencing the "real world."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University's chapter of Sigma Tau Epsilon professional fraternity made history with a clean sweep at its national convention, winning every award presented.

Two Morehead students also won national posts and one faculty member was chosen as adviser for the national organization.

Eleven students, three faculty members and one alumnus attended the 11th annual convention earlier this month in Lafayette, La.

Among the awards won were the Professional Activities Award, the Industrial Activities Award and the Scrapbook Award, which the industrial education fraternity brought home for the third consecutive year.

"This is the first time a chapter ever made a clean sweep of the awards," said John S. Vanhoose, faculty adviser of the MSU chapter.

Jeffrey Walls, an industrial education junior from South Point, Ohio, was elected national recorder-historian, a post held by MSU students since 1977.

James H. Beck, an industrial education senior from Columbus, Ohio, and president of MSU's STE chapter, was elected parliamentarian of the national group.

"Aside from his normal duties as parliamentarian, Beck also will be responsible for making arrangements for next year's convention to be hosted by MSU," said Vanhoose, who was selected as STE's national adviser.

(more)
"People are impressed with MSU and want to see what we're doing," he added.

Attending the convention were Dr. Robert E. Newton, head of the Department of Industrial Education and Technology, and fraternity advisers Pepper A. Tyree and Vanhoose. MSU alumnus Joyce A. Wogoman, a past national president of STE and the only woman elected to that post, also attended.

Students attending were Beck; Susan Borstner, graphic arts senior from Salt Lick; Marty Burton, industrial technology sophomore from Stanton; Byron V. Coburn, construction technology sophomore from Martin; Marsha Rumford, graphic arts sophomore from Milford; Thomas M. Sexton, industrial education senior from Ezel; John Stewart, industrial technology senior from Catlettsburg; Breck A. Tyree, welding junior from Morehead; Walls; Greg Wilder, electronics technology senior from Bell Co.; and Susan Wiley, industrial education junior from Owenton.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Something very fishy will be occurring on the campus of Morehead State University when MSU hosts the Bass Fishing Institute (BFI) at its Academic Athletic Center on April 17 and 18.

Anglers from Kentucky and surrounding states will catch their limit in knowledge without wetting a line.

Roger Moore, Billy Murray, Bobby Murray, Dave Myers, Shag Shahid and Kim Whitaker will be sharing the knowledge they've acquired through years of experience, stressing the how, when and where of fishing that, with a little variation, can be successfully applied to all types of fishing.

Also available to participants is a comprehensive study manual, not available elsewhere, detailing the techniques presented during the course of instruction. The content is a combination of theory and facts compiled by professional faculty and staff, complete with structure diagrams and reference charts.

The adult registration fee covering the entire program is $40. BFI encourages family participation by permitting a regular paying adult to register any youth, aged 10-15 years, free. In addition, the spouse of a regular paying adult may enroll for half the fee, $20, qualifying for an additional free registration of a youngster. A family of four can enjoy the entire weekend at the low rate of $60.

On-site registrations will be accepted, as space permits, at the Academic Athletic Center on April 17 at 7:30 a.m. The opening session will begin at 9:00 a.m.

Prospective students are encouraged to pre-register by contacting Bass Fishing Institute, Office of Campus Events, Morehead State University, Morehead, KY 40351. The telephone number is (606) 783-5171.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Growing herbs for cooking and for teas is a hobby Sylvia Layne has enjoyed for several years, "because fresh herbs have a much better flavor than dried:"

Mid-April, after the ground is warm and dry enough to work, is the time to plant herbs, according to Mrs. Layne, adjunct professor of theatre at Morehead State University. The soil should be loose, contain plenty of organic matter, and have good drainage and direct sunlight.

"Pick a place close to the house, where you can get to them quickly when you're cooking," advises Mrs. Layne. "A few in a flower bed next to the kitchen door would be perfect."

Because soil in Kentucky is often too acidic for herbs, it is a good idea to have a soil analysis before planting.

"You can get your soil tested at the county extension office," says Mrs. Layne. "They'll tell you what you need to add."

To prepare the ground for planting, spade it about six inches deep, add organic matter or fertilizer and bust up the dirt clods until the soil is fine.

"Don't pulverize it, though, because if it's too fine it will get hard and crusty when it rains," Mrs. Layne explains. "It should have the consistency of pie dough."

Growing Herbs
2-2-2-2-2-2

Some seeds have very hard coatings and should be soaked overnight before planting to speed up germination.

"To sow the seeds, mix them with a handful of sand—to keep them from being lost—and sprinkle lightly. Then, cover with about their thickness of dirt, water the bed and cover it with a thin, porous cloth," Mrs. Layne explains.

An herb bed is cared for much the same way as a tobacco bed, says Mrs. Layne. "Keep the ground moist and make sure the young plants are protected from the sun and wind with a cover."

When the herbs have about four leaves, thin by cutting close to the ground. "This doesn't disturb the roots of the other plants the way pulling them up does," she says. "Some herbs, such as dill and fennel, need very little space, while larger plants such as Angelica and Mullen require several feet."

Weeding while the herbs are small is a difficult job because it is hard to tell them apart.

"If I'm not sure whether something is a weed or an herb, I pinch it to see if it smells. If it doesn't, it's a weed."

Herbs need no cultivation if they are mulched.

"Just let them grow, and in a few weeks you'll have fresh herbs to add to your dishes."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Favorite songs and dances from Broadway and the movies will be featured in Morehead State University's final production of the 1981-82 theatre season.

"Two on the Aisle," a musical revue, will be presented Tuesday, April 27, through Saturday, May 1, in the Kibbey Theatre.

"We'll have a selection of songs from the war years and an international dance among the numbers," said Mike Drury, assistant to the director.

Marvin Philips, coordinator of the theatre program, conceived the show.

"The original idea for the show was to get the other schools involved, to make it an all-campus event," Drury said. "We have people from music and psychology and from all over."

Dr. James Quisenberry, professor of speech, will serve as faculty advisor for the show. Homer Tracy, who teaches dance in Morehead and Maysville, is the choreographer.

The production begins at 8 p.m. Admission is $4 for adults, 75 cents for children, and free for students with a valid MSU ID card.

Additional information is available from the MSU Theatre box office at (606) 783-2170.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- For adults who haven't finished high school, Morehead State University's Adult Learning Center offers a second chance.

Bonnie Burns, ALC coordinator, provides students with individualized instruction in reading, English, social studies, math and science.

"Our students usually are between 16 and 44 years old and have jobs," Ms. Burns says, adding that anyone over 17 who has dropped out of school is welcome.

"Many are preparing for the General Educational Development (GED) test, which when completed, will entitle them to receive a high school equivalency certification from their Board of Education," she explains. "And we have students who have little formal schooling, who are just learning to read."

Regardless of a person's educational level, the center has materials available. "We have beginning reading books about subjects which interest adults," says Ms. Burns. "We don't use grade school books here."

Returning to the classroom after many years, or beginning an education in midlife is difficult, "especially if you have kids and a job or house to maintain," Ms. Burns explains.

But despite the hardships, most of those enrolling at the center successfully complete the GED test, she reported.

"Even those students who don't get a GED are successful because they meet the goals they have for themselves, like learning to read or improving skills," she adds.
The reason often given by students for returning to school is the hope that it will improve their chances in the job market. The Kentucky Bureau for Manpower Services frequently refers people to the center because a high school diploma is a requirement for most jobs today.

Some Rowan County Vocational School students also attend the center in preparation for the GED test or to upgrade math skills. Although a high school diploma isn't necessary for enrollment at the vocational school, it is desirable to complete the GED before graduation.

"Quite a few of our students go on to college," says Ms. Burns, adding that the center's oldest GED graduate, a 78-year-old woman, is now enrolled at MSU.

Additional information about the Adult Learning Center is available from Bonnie Burns, UPO 1337, MSU, Morehead, KY 40351. The telephone number is (606) 783-3180.
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Dr. Bernard Davis, head of Morehead State University's Department of Management and Marketing, and Dr. Douglas Dotterweich, assistant director for regional research of MSU's Appalachian Development Center, are the authors of a study published in the current issue of the "1981 Annual Report" of Kentucky's Council of Economic Advisors.

The study, "An Update of the Economy of Eastern Kentucky," is among seven appearing in the report.

The Kentucky Council of Economic Advisors was created by executive order in December, 1970, to collect, compile, and interpret economic data of the Commonwealth. Such data includes statistics on employment, unemployment, wages, personal income, profits, and other socioeconomic information. In addition, the Council makes economic projections and recommendations to the governor at the beginning of each fiscal year.

Copies of the report are free to non-profit agencies and organizations. Profit operations and individuals are assessed $10 per copy.

Copies may be requested from: The Council of Economic Advisors, 451 Commerce Building, University of Kentucky, Lexington, KY 40506.

A Chinese art collection from the National Palace Museum in Taiwan went on public display for the first time in America at Morehead State University in April.

Spanning 3,000 years of Chinese history, the 58-piece collection was formally given to MSU's Department of Art by Richard Wang, curator of exhibitions at the Republic of China's National Palace Museum. The gift is valued at $60,000.

The collection includes replicas of masterpieces chosen from the museum's 600,000 works. Included are hanging silk landscape paintings, bronze utilitarian vessels, porcelains and calligraphy from ancient Chinese scrolls.

The entire collection is available for exhibition at other colleges and universities throughout the country.

Dr. Bill Booth, head of MSU's Department of Art, visited Taiwan last fall as a consultant to the National Palace Museum and arranged for the collection.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University's sixth annual Appalachian Celebration will take place June 20-26, on the MSU campus.

The week-long event is designed to pay tribute to Appalachia's rich cultural past, its dynamic present and its promising future.

Sponsored by MSU's Appalachian Development Center, the Celebration includes a variety of activities for a broad range of age, educational, and interest levels. Major events include the Heritage Arts Workshop, Appalachian Crafts Workshop, Elderhostel, Jesse Stuart Symposium, concerts and dances, Natural Heritage Tour and Hike, Scholar in Residence lectures, exhibits and displays and a day-long crafts market.

The Heritage Arts Workshop is a week of courses devoted to the development and preservation of multiple skills and traditions which distinctively reflect authentic Appalachian mountain culture and heritage. Classes in music, dance, literature, and crafts are available with or without college credit. The classes are open to any interested person regardless of educational background or experience.

The Appalachian Crafts Workshop essentially is a series of six mini-workshops to be conducted Friday, June 25, at the Adron Doran University Center. They are designed to appeal to local and regional crafts people who want to improve some aspect of their craft such as production, marketing, pricing or accounting.

Elderhostel is part of a nationwide program to provide college learning experiences for the elderly. The MSU session will coincide with the Appalachian Celebration to provide opportunities for participation in events and classes to enrich their week-long experience with exposure to Appalachian heritage and culture.

The Jesse Stuart Symposium, June 24 and 25, will provide study of Stuart's life and works in the land which inspired his literary creations. Activities include lectures, readings, panel discussions, displays, and a
The Natural Heritage Tour and Hike—a day-long tour of the Morehead region—will include Cave Run Reservoir, Natural Bridge, Sky Bridge, and the Red River Gorge. The excursion will culminate with a hike into the virgin forests of Tight Hollow. Participation in the event will be limited by bus capacity. Applicants will be accepted on a first-come, first-served basis.

Loyal Jones, the 1982 Scholar in Residence, is a well-known Appalachian historian, essayist, poet, and balladeer. During the Celebration, Jones will instruct a class in folk literature for the Heritage Arts Workshop and one in Appalachian history for the Elderhostel program. In addition, he will present a public performance on Tuesday, June 22, at 7 p.m., in the Adron Doran University Center and will be available throughout the week for individual conferences and informal discussions.

Exhibits, displays and demonstrations usually attract larger crowds each year. Located in the Button Auditorium Drill Room, award winning quilts will highlight this year's displays. In addition, quilt experts will be available to evaluate, document, and photograph traditionally constructed quilts.

Local musicians will provide music in the display arena each afternoon to enhance visitor's viewing pleasure with the nostalgic sounds of mountain music. Also, exhibits and displays will be complimented by a book exhibit and sale sponsored by the Appalachian Book and Record Shop of Berea, Ky.

A day-long crafts market scheduled Saturday, June 26, from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. will provide the Celebration's grand finale. All regional crafts people are invited to participate in the sale. The recent resurgence of interest in the production of authentic Appalachian crafts promises a wide variety of high quality crafts for wholesale and retail buyers. The market will be located in the Laughlin Health Building.
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- More than 300 Future Farmers of America members, parents, advisers and guests are expected to attend the annual Eastern Regional FFA Awards Banquet at Morehead State University on Saturday, May 8.

"These are the results of the Regional FFA Day we had on campus April 12," said Dr. Joe Bendixen, professor of agriculture and MSU's coordinator of the event.

High school students from the 22-school region will receive awards for excellence in public speaking, music and farm achievements.

The banquet is scheduled at 6:30 p.m. in the Crager Room of the Adron Doran University Center.

Additional information is available from Dr. Benedixen at (606) 783-3309.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- A sense of the past with roots in tradition---that's what Morehead State University's Heritage Arts Workshop is all about.

It's a week of classes and activities devoted to the development and preservation of the skills and traditions handed down from generation to generation by Appalachian mountain people.

The workshop, scheduled June 20-26, is part of MSU's sixth annual Appalachian Celebration. Campuswide, the celebration provides a variety of activities sponsored by MSU's Appalachian Development Center.

Last year's participants included people from Utah, New York, Maryland, Colorado, and England, as well as all of Kentucky's neighboring Appalachian states.

This year's schedule provides multiple activities in four major areas--music, dance, literature, and crafts. The workshop is open to any interested person regardless of age, experience, or educational background.

Instructors for the week-long event include regionally-acclaimed musicians, dancers, folklorists, and crafts people. Highlighting the list is Loyal Jones, director of the Appalachian Center at Berea College and this year's Appalachian Celebration Scholar-in-Residence.

Jones, historian, essayist, poet, and balladeer, will provide instruction in Appalachian folk literature along with MSU folklorist and English professor Dr. Ron Dobler. Dr. Dobler also will provide instruction in dulcimer playing.

(more)
Other instructors include Dr. Glenn Fulbright, MSU professor of music, who will coordinate a workshop in recorders and shaped note singing; Bill Bryant--dulcimer construction; Genevieve Shimer--English and Early American dances and New England contras; Joe Sartor--pottery and painting; Gerry Gray and Ann Leach--ballads and other songs; Bob Dalsemer--Appalachian dances and clogging; Cheryl Hall--weaving; Steve Hickman--dance band; and Ed Stephens--dulcimer.

Evening dance parties designed for Heritage Arts Workshops participants are scheduled Sunday, Monday, and Wednesday at 8 p.m., and the workshop will culminate Friday evening with a potluck supper and dance party. Tuesday and Thursday evenings have been left unscheduled to allow participants the opportunity to attend concerts by the McLain Family Band and John McCutcheon.

University housing will be available to participants at $4 per night for suites, $6 for semi-private rooms, and $10 for singles. Meals will be available at the MSU cafeteria. Workshop registration fees are $60.

Additional information is available from Dr. Glenn Fulbright, Department of music, MSU, Morehead, KY 40351. The telephone is (606) 783-4682.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Coming from across the nation, elder citizens will learn about Appalachian folk culture, heritage and history this summer during two week-long Elderhostel courses at Morehead State University.

Scheduled June 20-26 and July 11-17, the Elderhostel sessions will include classes examining the Appalachian people, lifestyle, beliefs, music, literature and dancing. Extracurricular activities also are scheduled.

Inspired by the youth hostels and folk schools of Europe, Elderhostel is an international network of more than 500 schools offering special low-cost, short-term residential learning programs for older adults.

MSU's June Elderhostel coincides with the annual Appalachian Celebration. During the week, "hostelers" will be offered a deeper understanding of Appalachia through workshops, concerts, dances, exhibits and displays, scholars-in-resident, lectures and readings.

The July session will include participation in several mountain activities in the Morehead area.

Persons 60 or older or those whose spouse or companion qualifies may participate in Elderhostel.

Additional information is available from George Eyster, of Continuing Education, MSU, Morehead, KY 40351. The telephone number is (606) 783-2276.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- A new, four-year program in para-legal studies soon will be available at Morehead State University.

Scheduled to begin this fall, the program will train students to work with attorneys as para-professionals.

Typical duties include researching real estate titles and court cases, interviewing clients, taking depositions and writing briefs.

"We surveyed attorneys in Eastern Kentucky and found a need for para-legals," said Dr. Jack Bizzel, head of MSU's Department of Government and Public Affairs, who will coordinate the new program.

"Attorneys throughout Kentucky and in surrounding states have expressed interest in hiring para-legals," Dr. Bizzel said, adding that the demand nationwide is projected to increase more than 130 percent over the next 10 years.

Three new classes have been created for the program. They are Introduction to Paralegalism, Legal Research and Writing, and Trial Practice and Preparation. In addition, students will train during the summers with local attorneys.

"This is one of the real strengths of our program," said Dr. Bizzel.

Also in the program are courses in government and business. A minor in business administration is recommended to prepare students for law office management, as well as para-legal work.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Moments before the announcement of the 1982 Miss Morehead State University, Harriett Leidy of Ft. Mitchell couldn't picture herself wearing a crown and carrying roses.

Fate, however, was not to be denied. The 5-6 brunette found herself making the traditional walk of the reigning Miss MSU.

"I thought I might be a finalist," she says tentatively, recalling last year's pageant when she was named first runner-up to Tammy Jo Worthington of Greenup. "But, I was shocked."

Along with the title and the right to represent MSU in the Miss Kentucky Pageant in Louisville in July, she received $600 for wardrobe, an $800 scholarship and the traditional trophy, crown and roses.

Harriett is from a family of six children, but the stage and bright lights are not unfamiliar to her. A senior majoring in English and theatre, she has appeared on stage in such productions as "The Sound of Music," "The Lady of Larkspur Lotion," "Little Mary Sunshine," "Carousel," and "Annie Get Your Gun."

Although each of her roles involved singing and acting talents, the Beechwood High School graduate had no formal voice training before coming to MSU.

"I had done some singing in high school with church choirs, but I had never really sung until last year. I since have had private lessons with Anne Beane and Dr. Wanda Bigham," she explained.

Offstage, Harriett has worked in costume construction and directed some scenes.

"But I like being on stage. Last summer I got a taste of what it was like. I had a good time and hammed it up," says the 22-year-old coed.

During talent competition is the Miss MSU pageant, she sung a medley of Judy Garland Songs and plans to repeat the performance at the Miss Kentucky Pageant.

Preparations for that pageant will be, in her words, "physical work."

"I'm going to work out and sing every day--full force." she adds.

The Miss Kentucky Pageant may open many new doors for Harriett, but all she really wants to do is teach.

"I completed my student teaching and put it in the back of my mind. But recently, I have been observing some classes and as soon as I walked in the classroom, I knew I wanted to teach."

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Leidy of Ft. Mitchell.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Rachel Holloway, Morehead junior at Morehead State University, is the best college student in the country in informative speech.

She recently won first place in the informative speaking category at the Individual Events National Speech Championship in Columbus.

MSU's individual events team, of which Holloway is a member, finished fifth in the national competition.

MSU is the only Kentucky or OVC team to place in the top 25.

"This is the best we have ever done," says Chip Letzgus, MSU's individual events speech coach. "We were 10th last year and 11th the year before."

In addition to her national championship, Holloway did well in other competition areas. She earned fifth in pentathlon, which includes team members entered in five or more events.

Holloway also was a semi-finalist in impromptu speaking, poetry interpretation and rhetorical criticism; and a quarter-finalist in extemporaneous speaking and prose interpretation.

Holloway and Sally Ray, Frankfort junior, were semi-finalists in dramatic duo interpretation.

In rhetorical criticism, Joe Hansen, Cincinnati senior, was a semi-finalist and Nanci Gabbard, Ft. Thomas senior, and Lori Glass, Parkersburg, W. Va. junior, were quarter-finalists.

Millis Puckett, Elkhorn City sophomore; Lesly Reisenfeld, Cincinnati junior; Daryl Slusher, Morehead sophomore; Belinda Stambough, West Liberty junior; Phil Stowers, Alkol, W. Va. freshman; and Donna Totich, Morehead junior.
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Memorabilia of Appalachia's yesteryear once again will be brought to the forefront during Morehead State University's annual Appalachian Celebration, scheduled June 20-26.

The celebration, sponsored by MSU's Appalachian Development Center, consists of a variety of activities and events which appeal to a broad range of age, educational, and interest levels. The week-long event includes free concerts, dances, and lectures. All are open to the public.

Among the celebration attractions is an exhibits and demonstrations arena which will be open to the public, at no charge, in Button Auditorium from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. throughout the week.

Each year, the celebration's exhibits and displays have increased in number, variety, and interest. Shirley Hamilton, ADC's assistant director for community services, says that she expects this year to exceed all others.

"I think we're going to have more regional crafts people and artists who want to demonstrate their work, more who want to display work already completed, and more who want to display collections," she remarked.

"Our people have begun to recognize just how rewarding it can be to share their abilities and possessions with other people," she added.

This year's exhibits and displays will be enhanced by the nostalgic sound of traditional mountain music provided by regional musicians. In addition, local and regional writers are invited to set up book displays and sales and to participate in informal readings and discussions of Appalachian literature and life.

(more)
Book displays will include one by the mobile book store of Berea’s Appalachian Book and Record Shop.

Prize winning quilts, as well as traditionally constructed quilts of all kinds, will be a feature during this year’s celebration. Experts will be available to evaluate, photograph, and document quilts. Pattern swaps will be an on-going activity throughout the week.

Collections of Appalachian artifacts and relics related to specific Appalachian industries and other specific areas of Appalachian life will also be on display.

"We are interested in displaying the common artifacts and tools that were a part of the day-to-day living, working, and playing experiences of the early Appalachian settlers," Ms. Hamilton explained.

All regional artists, crafts people, and collectors of authentic Appalachian artifacts may demonstrate their skills and displays during the celebration.

To reserve display space or obtain additional information, contact Shirley Hamilton, ADC, Morehead State University, Morehead, KY 40351. The telephone is (606) 783-4731.
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University's chapter of Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia has earned an "Outstanding Chapter of the Decade" honorable mention from the national professional music fraternity.

The MSU chapter, Theta Pi, is one of eight Phi Mu Alpha chapters in the country to be honored with the outstanding chapter award. There are 250 chapters across the nation.

The award is based on a decade of work by the chapter, considering musical achievement, fraternal tradition, membership development and other aspects of chapter organization.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University's Displaced Homemaker Program will begin its third job-orientation session on Monday, May 24. The program is open to residents of Bath, Montgomery, and Rowan counties who qualify under CETA guidelines as displaced homemakers.

A displaced homemaker is identified as a person who has recently become the head of a household through death, disability, or divorce of a spouse; has been dependent upon income supplied by the spouse or other family member for a specified time; is without the necessary training and experience to compete effectively in the job market; and is economically in need.

The program provides work experience, classroom training, and job referrals. Qualifying applicants may receive $2.60 per hour for 30 hours a week. Other benefits include reimbursements for child-care expenses and travel.

The Displaced Homemaker Program is funded by CETA and sponsored by MSU's Appalachian Development Center. Any person in the three-county area who is interested in participating in the program should contact the Bureau for Manpower Services on Bradley Avenue in Morehead or on Locust Street in Mt. Sterling.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Dr. Robert B. Hayes, president of Marshall University, borrowed a line from Charles Dickens to describe the graduation of more than 1,000 students from Morehead State University here last week.

"It is both the best of times and the worst of times," he said. "It is the best because you are completing a course you set for yourself several years ago. It is the worst of times because of the situation in the current job market and the economic pressures facing you."

He added that money is only a small part in judging the value of what education can mean for each individual.

"You graduates offer us the best reason for confidence in our future," he said. "You are our greatest resource and our hope lies in you," he remarked.

Dr. Hayes told the graduates that they must begin to learn the meaning of sacrifice and apply it. He also advised them not to leave the cost of any success for future generations to bear.

MSU President Morris L. Norfleet conferred honorary doctorates on Hayes and G. B. Johnson, board chairman of First Bank and Trust Co. of Ashland.

Dr. John Kleber, professor of history, was recipient of the "Distinguished Faculty Award," and Dr. David Hylbert, professor of geoscience, received the "Distinguished Researcher Award."

A member of the MSU faculty since 1968, Dr. Kleber holds a bachelor's degree from Bellarmine College and the master's and doctorate from the University of Kentucky. He is a native of Louisville.
The University Press of Kentucky this fall will publish the public papers of former Gov. Lawrence W. Wetherby as edited by Dr. Kleber under the auspices of the Kentucky Advisory Commission of Public Documents.

Dr. Hylbert, a member of the MSU faculty since 1963, holds bachelor's and master's degrees from Ohio University and the doctorate from the University of Tennessee.

He has received more than $200,000 in state and federal grants for student-centered research into the geological causes of roof failures in Eastern Kentucky coal mines. Dr. Hylbert's work has made him one of the top researchers in the field of coal mine safety.

Norris Beckley, Shelbyville senior, was awarded a Presidential Citation for International Leadership. He has been selected to tour South America later this year as a member of "Athlètes in Action."

Four graduates were recognized for maintaining a perfect 4.0 grade point average throughout their four years of study at MSU. They included Darlene Mitchell Back of Ewing, Marian Coakley of Frankfort and Robert Hamilton and Rebecca McDaniel of Morehead.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- A geologist specializing in coal mine safety research and a noted historian and author were the recipients of Morehead State University's top faculty awards for the 1981-82 school year.

Dr. David K. Hylbert, professor of geoscience, was selected to receive the "Distinguished Researcher Award" and the "Distinguished Faculty Award" recipient was Dr. John Kleber, professor of history and director of the Honors Program.

The awards were presented recently during MSU's spring commencement ceremonies. Making the presentations were Dr. Ted Pass, professor of biology and the 1980-81 research winner, and Dr. Lewis Barnes, professor of English and last year's faculty winner.

Dr. Hylbert, a member of the MSU faculty since 1963, holds bachelor's and master's degrees from Ohio University and a doctorate from the University of Tennessee. He has received more than $200,000 in state and federal grants for student-centered research into the geological causes of roof failures in Eastern Kentucky coal mines. Dr. Hylbert's work has made him one of the top researchers in the field of coal mine safety.

In addition to teaching and research responsibilities, Dr. Hylbert is a member of the Society of Sigma Xi, Kentucky Academy of Science, Geological Society of Kentucky, American Institute of Professional Geologists and the Society of Economic Paleontologists and Mineralogists.

The 43-year-old researcher is married to the former Shirley Shrigley of Zanesville, Ohio.

A member of the MSU history faculty since 1968, Dr. John Kleber holds a bachelor's degree from Bellarmine College and both a master's and doctorate from the University of Kentucky.

This fall, the University Press of Kentucky will publish the public papers of former Kentucky Governor Lawrence W. Wetherby as edited by Dr. Kleber under the auspices of the Kentucky Advisory Commission of Public Documents.

In addition to his teaching and scholarly activities, the 41-year-old historian has served as a member of the Committee of Faculty Organization, University Senate, General Education Ad Hoc Committee, Committee on Faculty Grievances and Ethics, founder of Rho Eta Chapter of Phi Alpha Theta and chairperson of the subcommittee on educational programs for the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

As director of the Honors Program, Dr. Kleber has developed its offerings from a two-year to a full four-year program.

He is a native of Louisville.

"The University is proud of these outstanding faculty scholars and we are pleased that they have received this recognition from their colleagues," said MSU President Morris L. Norfleet.

The faculty award was established in 1963-64 by the MSU Alumni Association and the research prize was created in 1978-79 by the University's Committee of Faculty Research.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Where is "The Land of The Honey-Colored Wind"?

It's in the fact and the fiction of Jesse Stuart's world which can be explored through Morehead State University's "Jesse Stuart Symposium" on Wednesday, June 23, and Thursday, 24.

The symposium is part of the week-long Appalachian Celebration sponsored by MSU's Appalachian Development Center. The Celebration focuses on the past, the present, and the future of Appalachian Kentucky and includes events to appeal to a wide range of age, interest, and educational levels.

The Jesse Stuart Symposium provides an opportunity to study Stuart's life and works in the land which inspired his creations--Eastern Kentucky. The symposium will culminate with a visit to the Stuart homestead, W-Hollow, in Greenup County.

The two-day event also will include lectures, readings, displays, and formal and informal discussions. Stuart scholars who will participate in the program include Jennings Mace, Jim Wayne Miller, and Ruel Foster. The program also will include exhibits and discussions by Doug and Karen Adams who have interpreted Stuart's "Land of the Honey-Colored Wind" through painting.

"Land of the Honey-Colored Wind" is the title of a recent Stuart anthology of stories and poems which has been made available to all school libraries in Kentucky through the Jesse Stuart Foundation.

The Jesse Stuart Symposium is free and open to the public with the exception of an optional $5 meal on Wednesday, June 23, to be followed by a special Jesse Stuart presentation by the Morehead State University Performing Arts Trio and a $3.50 fee for the guided bus tour of W-Hollow on Thursday, June 24.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Traditional mountain music and dance will punctuate Morehead State University's sixth annual Appalachian Celebration opening here June 20.

The weeklong celebration runs through June 26 under sponsorship of MSU's Appalachian Development Center. The week of activities and events which take place across the MSU campus are a salute to Appalachian Kentucky's past, present, and future. Featured are events to appeal to a broad spectrum of age, interest and educational levels.

Lending an air of festivity will be a series of concerts and dances featuring the musical talents of some of the best in mountain music entertainment. Included are Loyal Jones, John McCutcheon, Leo Blair and the Appalachian Celebration Band, and the McLain Family Band. In addition, numerous local and regional musicians will perform at various events throughout the week.

Loyal Jones, noted Appalachian historian, poet, essayist and balladeer, will perform Tuesday, June 22, at 7 p.m., in a combined concert and lecture centering on traditional Appalachian ballads. Jones is the director of the Appalachian Center at Berea College.

John McCutcheon, widely known for his role in popularizing the once nearly-extinct hammer dulcimer, will perform in concert on June 24 at 7 p.m.
Leo Blair, MSU's own traditional musician of note, will introduce his Appalachian Celebration Band in an outdoor concert at noon on Friday, June 25, on the front lawn of the Camden-Carroll Library.

The internationally-recognized McLain Family Band from Berea will perform Friday, June 25, at 8 p.m. The McLains recently performed in Carnegie Hall.

Winding up the week on Saturday, June 26, at 7 p.m., will be a "Mountain Music Concert" featuring numerous local and regional musicians. Evening concerts will be staged in the Crager Room of the Adron Doran University Center. All concerts are free and open to the public.

MOREHEAD, Ky. -- A Chinese art collection from the Republic of China has returned to Morehead State University for summer exhibition.

The collection was given to MSU by the National Palace Museum in Taiwan. It will be shown in the Claypool-Young Art Gallery during MSU's two summer terms, running from June 7 through Aug. 6.

The exhibit includes replicas of Chinese masterpieces, many from thousands of years ago. Included in the 58-piece collection are hanging silk landscape paintings, bronze utilitarian vessels, porcelains and calligraphy from ancient Chinese scrolls.

The collection's first U.S. showing was at MSU in April. A two-week exhibit followed the opening. Because of numerous requests, the collection has been reinstalled in the MSU gallery.

Starting this fall, the collection will go on tour throughout the United States. Showings already have been booked in Wisconsin, Virginia, Florida and Mississippi.

The exhibit is free to the public. The gallery is open weekdays from 8 a.m. until 4 p.m.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- The Federalist Party won all but one office in the 1982 Kentucky Bluegrass Boys State elections held recently at Morehead State University.

Among the Federalist Party candidates was Shawn E. Barkley of Richmond, who was named governor.

Other winners were Stephen J. Grigsby of Lexington, lieutenant governor; E. Todd Noe of Junction, secretary of state; Mark R. Turpin of Richmond, auditor; J. Chris Ball of Frankfort, superintendent of public instruction; Mike D. Shadoan of Richmond, commissioner of agriculture; Derrek L. Thomas of Paducah, attorney general; and Marcus A. Simpson of Lexington, treasurer.

The only Nationalist Party candidate elected was John C. Quesinberry of Clearfield, railroad commissioner.

The newly-elected officers traveled to the state capital in Frankfort where they met their counterparts in state government. Later, they reported their experiences to the other 300 Boys State delegates.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Some people work harder to get that extra edge in their career. For Morehead State University senior Kevin Harris, the extra work has paid off.

The Grayson resident will spend 10 weeks as an academic research assistant at the University of Tennessee Space Institute in Tullahoma, Tenn.

Harris is only the second student from MSU to receive the appointment. He will be the only undergraduate student participating, according to Betty Moran, MSU's coordinator of special services.

"Kevin was among 35 regional applicants to be considered and one of only six chosen," she explained. "It is quite an honor for him and in addition to his work, he'll be able to expand academically through the prescribed courses."

The business administration major will be enrolled in classes and will work 20 hours per week. He can earn eight semester hours of college credit.

His work will be concentrated in the summer program in remote sensing of earth resources and environment.

"I have an option in data processing, and I'll be using a lot of what I've learned in those classes, including research and evaluation," Harris said. "I also hope to get into the lab and work with some remote sensing devices."

The program is designed to encourage students to work in their chosen field and to develop relative interests.

(more)
"Requirements for the program included a background in business, knowledge of computers and good academic standing," Mrs. Moran said.

In addition to meeting these requirements, the graduate of East Carter High School is interested in the environment.

"I love the outdoors and nature. This summer I hope to find a way to use my education and experience in the computer field to help preserve the outdoors."

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Talmadge Harris of Grayson.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Edward Glen Ramey of Bath County has been accepted at the University of Oklahoma Health Sciences Center for the 1982 fall semester.

The Morehead State University senior was among eight persons offered the opportunity to work toward a bachelor's degree in nuclear medicine.

A 1979 graduate of Bath County High School, Ramey will graduate with honors from Morehead State University in August with an associate degree in radiologic technology.

While attending MSU, he served as Eagle mascot during the 1980-81 school year and as a varsity cheerleader last year. He is a member of Sigma Nu fraternity and was chapter treasurer.

During the spring and fall semesters of 1981, Ramey was named to the President's List at Morehead State University with perfect grades and to the National Dean's List in the spring of 1982.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Glen T. Ramey of Midland.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Linda Steiner of Lexington has hit the big time --- at least for the summer.

The Morehead State University radio and television major will join the Cable News Network in Washington, D.C. for the summer as a student intern.

Ms. Steiner made the initial contact for the internship while on a broadcasting field study tour to Washington with other MSU students.

"While we were at the CNN studios, I overheard a girl working a camera mention she was an intern, so I asked her about it," Ms. Steiner recalled. "She told me what to do and I applied with the help of Thom Yancy, instructor of radio-television at MSU and tour director."

Although only a sophomore, Ms. Steiner won't walk into the CNN studio on June 7 without experience. A member of Chi Omega social sorority and Alpha Epsilon Rho broadcasting fraternity, she has been very active in MSU-TV, the University closed circuit channel.

"I worked on production crews last year and did some writing for some shows," she said. "This past semester I produced my own television show and wrote and edited for the student newspaper."

The Tates Creek High School graduate believes the opportunities she has had at MSU will be a plus during the eight-week internship.

"Being able to work on actual productions so soon after coming to MSU has been great," she said. "I've been able to work with more advanced students, side by side, and learn a great deal. Just being able to hang around the studio and watch the work has been good for me."

(more)
Ms. Steiner will stay in special summer housing for interns at George Washington University and will earn eight semester hours of college credit for her work.

Her duties will include camera work, production and other studio tasks. She also will be going out on the street with reporters.

"I'm really looking forward to being inside the studio and watching the professionals," Ms. Steiner says. "It fascinates me. Just hanging around Washington will be great because so much news happens there."

As far as future plans, Ms. Steiner has a firm goal in sight.

"I want to produce and write. Working on the technical side in the studio is a challenge for me and that's where I want to be."

She is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Conrad Steiner of 603 Tateswood, Lexington, and is the granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Dodge of Paris-
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Loyal Jones, director of the Appalachian Center at Berea College, will be Morehead State University's 1982 Appalachian Celebration "Scholar in Residence" during the sixth annual celebration, June 20-26.

Sponsored by MSU's Appalachian Development Center, the celebration is a weeklong event which focuses on the past, present, and future of Appalachian Kentucky and includes a wide range of activities to appeal to a wide range of age, interest, and educational levels.

Jones is a noted Appalachian historian, poet, essayist, and balladeer who has become a leader in the still-developing field of Appalachian studies. His primary expertise is Appalachian culture.

Born and reared on a mountain farm in Western North Carolina, among his first enterprises as an adult were farming and training horses. These experiences helped him develop a deep sensitivity toward the land and its people.

As director of Berea's Appalachian Center for 12 years, he has been responsible for the development of an outstanding archival collection in the form of oral histories, photographs, records, books and other documents related to Appalachian history and culture.

As a writer, he has contributed a significant volume of work to educational journals and books and to regional literary magazines and anthologies. Full-length publications include the text for "Appalachia: A Self Portrait," and "Radio's 'Kentucky Mountain Boy' Bradley Kincaid."

(more)
Sibyl Clark, a visiting British folklorist and traditional dance authority, spent several months at the Berea and MSU Appalachian centers. She remarked that Jones had the special sensitivity necessary for authentic communication with mountain people. And, communication, she insists, is the key to real understanding.

During the Celebration, Jones will teach a class in ballads and story-telling for a Heritage Arts Workshop and a class in Appalachian history for an Elderhostel program. The highlight of his contributions to the week of festivities will be a public lecture and concert in which he will discuss and sing traditional Appalachian ballads.

The lecture is scheduled Tuesday, June 22, at 7 p.m. in the University Center's Crager Room and will be followed by a dance. The concert and the dance will be free and open to the public.

Jones also will be available throughout the Appalachian Celebration to consult and chat with visitors and participants on an informal basis.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- It's spring again, and they're getting out their tents...tents caterpillars, that is.

Most homeowners are familiar with those pesky guests who build their silky tents in trees each spring.

There are two types of tent caterpillars, according to Dr. Gerald L. DeMoss, associate professor of biology at Morehead State University: the forest tent caterpillar, or "Malacosoma americanum."

"The forest tent caterpillar feeds principally on oaks," he added. They also like maples and poplars." Dr. DeMoss says that they are seen throughout North America, but are not prevalent in Eastern Kentucky.

"The eastern tent caterpillar is more noticeable," he reported. "It also is probably a little easier to control because we can get to the organisms to spray them."

Of the two varieties, Dr. DeMoss says the forest tent caterpillar could be a greater problem economically because it attacks trees suitable for commercial use. In contrast, the eastern tent caterpillar is less threatening to native forest communities, according to Dr. DeMoss.

"The only native tree they affect in this area is the wild cherry, which is not an important lumber tree," Dr. DeMoss says. However, they also can do considerable damage to apple trees.

"They do affect some other ornamentals, such as crab apples," he says, adding that wild cherry or apple trees can attract the insects to an area where they will attack other trees.

(more)
Caterpillars

"Healthy trees are very susceptible to damage," Dr. DeMoss says.

Female adults lay their eggs on the end of twigs on host trees, forming a conspicuous gall-like lump. They remain there for 10 months.

When the larvae hatch the following spring, they are about the size of a hair. During their six-to-eight weeks development, their main occupation is eating and growing. It is at this time the caterpillars build their tents for protection from birds. The construction is a community effort.

"They go out on the tree to feed, and then run back to the tent for protection," Dr. DeMoss says. "The bigger the larvae, the bigger the tent."

The largest tents are about one foot deep and one foot wide. And, it is the feeding, not the tents themselves that damage the trees.

"It won't kill the tree, but it might stunt its growth," he said.

Chemicals are the only control for the pests. Since the ban on the pesticide DDT, the chemical methoxychlor is used, according to Dr. DeMoss.

Dormant oils can be helpful as controls if egg masses are coated during winter applications. Despite the use of these controls, the insects will return to the same host tree.

Dr. DeMoss, who maintains his own orchard of 25 to 30 apple, peach, pear and cherry trees, says he removes the egg cases when he prunes and applies dormant oils each winter. He does not recommend burning the tents.

"It seems to defeat your purpose to harm the tree to kill a pest," he says, adding that bark and sap can be damaged by burning.

While there have been years when the caterpillars have destroyed a great deal of foliage, Dr. DeMoss believes we may be in a declining period of infestation locally, based on the number of egg cases he has seen this spring. However, the level of infestation varies from area to area.

All caterpillars break camp.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- A watercolor painting by an alumnus of Morehead State University has been selected for one of the oldest and most famous annual art exhibits in the country.

Gary Akers, a Floyd County native, painted "Woodrow's Room" at the Borders Brothers Farm in Boone County. The painting was accepted this spring for the American Watercolor Society's 115th annual exhibition in New York City.

"For people who work in watercolor, it is the most prestigious and competitive exhibition in the United States," says Dr. Bill Booth, head of MSU's Department of Art. Approximately 150 paintings were chosen for the exhibit.

"For one of our graduates to be selected is important recognition for MSU," says Dr. Booth. Akers also had a painting accepted for the 1979 exhibition.

"Woodrow's Room" also was selected for inclusion in the American Watercolor Society's traveling exhibition. The 50-painting display will tour major art museums and galleries throughout the U. S. this year.

In addition, Akers' work is featured in the June issue of "American Artist." A six-page article by Dr. Booth, "Gary Akers: Paintings from the Borders Brothers Farm," includes several photographs of the artist's paintings. "American Artist" is the nation's largest art magazine. Akers will be featured in five other national publications this year.

Akers, who received his bachelor's degree in 1972, finished a master's degree with an emphasis in painting and drawing at MSU in 1974.

(more)
While studying for his master's, Akers worked as a graduate teaching assistant. He also was an MSU art instructor during the summer of 1975.

Dr. Booth describes Akers as "a strong supporter of the MSU art department and particularly, the art scholarship fund raising drive." He reported that Akers donated 24 paintings to the annual scholarship auction last fall.

Akers has been working as a professional artist for seven years. During this time, he has produced 16 limited edition prints in numbers of 300 or more, along with hundreds of sketches, watercolors and a large number of works in egg tempera.

The artist has also placed more than 15,000 pieces of his work in the hands of collectors. He is represented by his own studio, as well as galleries in Louisiana, Mississippi and Maryland.

Painting each day in his 1850 log cabin studio, Akers lives in Union, Ky., with his wife, Lynn, also an MSU alumnus.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- A retail Appalachian Crafts Market will provide the grand finale to Morehead State University's 1982 Appalachian Celebration on Saturday, June 26, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Laughlin Health Building.

The weeklong Celebration, scheduled June 20-26, is sponsored by MSU's Appalachian Development Center. It focuses on the past, present and future of Appalachian Kentucky and includes a wide range of events to appeal to a wide range of age, interest, and educational levels.

The Crafts Market will be open to all retail buyers and to craftspeople from across the state who produce traditional Appalachian crafts. Producers of non-traditional but original crafts from within the 49-county Appalachian Kentucky region also are eligible to participate.

Limited space requires advance approval of eligibility to display and sell at the market. Approval will be granted by a selection committee which will base decisions on the quality and authenticity of craft items.

Craftspeople interested in participating in the market are required to make application to the selection committee as soon as possible. Applications should include photographs representative of the works and information as to the category, traditional non-traditional, and the kind of craft.

Crafts which fall into the traditional Appalachian craft category include quilting, weaving, pottery, woodworking, basketmaking, and constructing traditional Appalachian musical instruments such as dulcimers, banjos and fiddles.

(more)
Non-traditional crafts include needlework, soft sculpting, knitting, crocheting, macrame, and wood toy making. Other items also may qualify.

Applicants also must identify the source of their pattern or design. Those entering works in the traditional-craft category need to specify how the pattern or design was obtained. Applicants entering in the non-traditional category can enter only original patterns and designs.

Crafts constructed from commercial or published patterns, stencils, molds or from kits will not be considered. However, those consisting of some commercially constructed parts such as macrame beads may be considered if the parts are subordinate to the handcrafted work.

Examples of products which will not be considered as eligible for sale through the craft market include art works such as painting, drawings, lithographs, etchings, string art, decoupage, and photographs.

To apply for participation in the 1982 Appalachian Crafts Market, the required information and photographs of sample works must be forwarded to Selection Committee, 1982 Appalachian Crafts Market, Appalachian Development Center, Morehead State University, Morehead, KY 40351.

Additional information is available from Robert Justice, Appalachian crafts market coordinator, at (606) 783-4731.

A former public school teacher, she also had served as a supervising critic and demonstration teacher at Jersey City State College.

Mrs. Blomberg was a graduate of Northern Illinois State University and the University of Houston.

She is survived by her husband, Chester L. Blomberg of 11625 Balsam Dr., Royal Palm Beach, Fla.
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Old quilts, new quilts, and in-betweens will be featured at the display and exhibit arena of Morehead State University's sixth annual Appalachian Celebration, June 20-26.

Sponsored by the Appalachian Development Center, the celebration is a week of activities and events that take place across the MSU campus to pay homage to Appalachian Kentucky's past, present and future. It features a wide range of events to appeal to a broad spectrum of age, interest, and educational levels.

Kentuckians from all walks of life have begun taking a new look at the quilts they have inherited and at the quilting skills handed down from generation to generation.

Katie Christopherson, a member of the Board of Directors of the Kentucky Heritage Quilt Society, along with Lenora Lisle Perkings, a Kentucky Heritage Quilt Society documenters, will be at the display and exhibits arena in the Button Auditorium Drill Room, on Tuesday, June 22, from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. to document and evaluate quilts.

It will be a Register-Your-Quilt session to collect information based on the quilts themselves along with data provided by the owner. The information will be recorded and the quilts photographed for preservation in quilt archives.

If you have a quilt you want documented or that you would like to display during MSU's Appalachian Celebration, call or write Shirley Hamilton, Appalachian Development Center, MSU, Morehead, KY 40351. The telephone number is (606) 783-4731.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- The Appalachian heritage is more than the customs, traditions, and crafts handed down by our forebears. It also includes the land we dwell in and Eastern Kentucky has a wealth of natural beauty.

Morehead State University will include a "Natural Heritage Tour and Hike" in its annual Appalachian Celebration, scheduled June 20-26.

Sponsored by MSU's Appalachian Development Center, the Celebration features a variety of activities and events to appeal to a broad range of age, educational, and interest levels.

The tour includes Cave Run Reservoir, Natural Bridge, Sky Bridge, and the Red River Gorge. It concludes with a hike into the virgin forests of Tight Hollow, an area which has remained relatively undisturbed by man.

Participation in the tour and hike are limited by bus capacity. Participants will be accepted on a first-come, first-served basis. A $5 fee will cover transportation and other arrangements. Lunch will be on a Dutch treat basis at the Natural Bridge State Park Lodge. Tour buses will return to the MSU campus by late afternoon.

The "Natural Heritage Tour and Hike" will be directed by Dr. Roland L. Burns, associate professor of geography at MSU. Dr. Burns has conducted more than 75 tours into the Red River Gorge area and is an authority on the natural wonders of this particular area of Eastern Kentucky.

Additional information is available from Ellen Ragland, Appalachian Development Center, MSU, Morehead, KY 40351. The telephone is (606) 783-4731.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Cynthia Weaver of Elizabethtown has been elected 1982 governor of Kentucky Girls State.

She was selected in balloting by more than 300 high school coeds participating in the weeklong convention at Morehead State University.

Also elected were Vivian Daughter of Lexington, lieutenant governor; Cheryl Pfahl of Bowling Green, secretary of state; Sharon Post of Symsonia, superintendent of public instruction; B.J. Overley of Ashland, attorney general; Lori Webb of Paducah, treasurer; Beth Underwood of Campbellsville, auditor of public accounts; and Janet Ratliff of Rineyville, secretary of agriculture.

Convention delegates learned about state and local government by forming a mythical 51st state, complete with county and city governments. Lt. Gov. Martha Layne Collins addressed the convention.

The annual convention for selected high school coeds is sponsored by the Kentucky American Legion Auxiliary.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Some people are obsessed with computers, others with the joys of running, but Pat Petrillo and Larry Rebillot of Morehead State University are hooked on drum corps.

"I'm a fanatic, but I'm a calm fanatic," says Petrillo, a junior music education major from New Brunswick, N.J. He and Rebillot, a sophomore communications major from Louisville, Ohio, have been marching in drum corps since they were 11 years old. Both now are members of one of the top 10 corps in the nation, the Bayonne (N.J.) Bridgeman Drum and Bugle Corps. Petrillo is in the drum line and Rebillot is drum major.

According to Petrillo, drum and bugle corps have been around a long time. Originally, they were associated with veterans' organizations and infused with military tradition and style.

In 1975, Bridgeman "changed the face of drum corps," according to Petrillo. The corps dropped the military style uniforms and adopted long, yellow coats and black hats with wide brims and multi-colored scarves.

"We became more entertainment geared," he says. "More like a Broadway show."

Petrillo has been with Bridgeman since 1979. He is section leader of the nation's top drum line and won third place in national individual competition.

Petrillo and Rebillot are not the only MSU students who have been involved with Bridgeman. Greg Strouse, a junior from Louisville, Ky., marched with the corps last year.

(more)
"You don't really realize how good the group is until people see you perform and the crowd goes wild," says Strouse, who will be unable to march this year because of other commitments. Strouse played triple toms in the drum line and says the emotion is not confined to the crowd.

"I've come off the field many times, crying. It's hard to explain," he says. "We practice for so long and so hard that we hurt."

Although the corps performs only during the summer, they practice from late fall until the season begins. For members of the corps who live out-of-state, this means traveling to New Jersey once a month for practice during the fall, winter and spring. Each member must pay travel, food and other expenses, as well as a corps membership fee.

"It's been worth it," says Strouse. "It's been a tremendous learning experience for me. I can deal with pressure better and I've learned how to deal with competition."

Rebillot, who was chosen from the 128 members of the corps as drum major, is looking forward to his first year with Bridgeman after serving with two other corps.

"I don't even realize I've been accepted as drum major of Bridgeman this summer. It's still kind of a fantasy." He adds that drum and bugle corps have been an integral part of his life.

"I've been with it since the seventh grade. I've grown with it and love it. If I could major in drum and bugle corps here at MSU, I surely would."

Bridgeman will be performing in Louisville, Ky., on Aug. 10 and in Huntington, W. Va., on Aug. 11. Petrillo and Rebillot are arranging to have the corps spend the night at MSU, which is between the two cities. Rebillo says there are between six and 20 MSU students who are considering auditioning for Bridgeman next year and they are all looking forward to the corps visit.

Meanwhile, the two are anxious to perform this summer. Petrillo remarks that although last year was Bridgeman's best yet, it wasn't quite good enough.

"Nobody's perfect," he says, "but this year we're going to try."
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Twenty Morehead State University students are working throughout the area this summer as part of a special program.

The Commonwealth Work-Study Program, funded under federal guidelines and the Kentucky Higher Education Assistance Authority, provided the jobs for youth within six area agencies.

Requirements for the program stipulated that participants must be Kentucky residents, and eligible for federal work study programs, according to Dr. Ron Walke, director of student financial aid at MSU.

"In addition, they must have been enrolled in classes during the spring term, not enrolled in summer classes, and planning to return to MSU in the fall," Dr. Walke added.

Participating agencies include the Mt. Sterling-Montgomery County Recreation Commission, City of Morehead, Montgomery County Board of Education, City of Salt Lick, Pulaski County YMCA and the West Liberty Kiwanis Park.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Culminating Morehead State University's sixth annual Appalachian Celebration will be a Mountain Music Concert, Saturday, June 26, at 7 p.m. in the Crager Room of the Adron Doran University Center.

The Appalachian Celebration is a week-long festival of events appealing to a wide range of age, interest, and educational levels and that pay homage to Appalachia's past, present and future. It is sponsored by MSU's Appalachian Development Center.

The concert will feature regional musicians and will be highlighted by the dancing feet of James Bowling--holder of both national and world championship awards in clogging. Bowling is an MSU graduate and a native of Ashland.

Ray Ross, Jr., assistant professor of music at MSU, will emcee the program which will open and close with music by Leo Blair and the Appalachian Celebration Band, including Ray Ross, Jr., Ken Baldauf, and Ray Ross III. Other performers include Herb Rose, Sonja Bird Yancey, J.P. & Annadeene Fraley, and the Gions Brothers Band.

Herb Rose is a versatile musician whose performances have entertained audiences in the tri-state area of Kentucky, West Virginia and Ohio. He currently lives in Ironton, Ohio, where he has been a featured performer on WCAK Radio's weekly show "Country Music Hour." Backup music for Rose will be provided by the Appalachian Celebration Band.

(more)
Sonja Bird Yancey is a traditional performing artist with roots in the haunting, ancient minor key hymns of the Old Regular Baptist Church which she attended as a child in her native home of Perry County. She currently lives in Berea.

Although Yancey has written much of her own material, she has also continued to search out and perform the old mountain ballads that are a part of her mountain heritage. At age 17, Yancey recorded an album of Appalachian folksongs for children, and, at 18, she wrote the title song and recorded the sound track for a documentary featuring the Frontier Nursing Service of Hyden.

Recently, she has been signed as a Monument Records recording artist.

J. P. and Annadeene Fraley are well-known mountain music performers whose style is exemplified by a smooth, flowing, and flawlessly rhythmic execution. In addition to conducting their own annual music festival at their home in Greenup County, they have actively promoted the revitalization of traditional mountain music through participation as featured performers in countless music festivals and celebrations across the United States. They hold the distinction of having executed a command performance for Queen Elizabeth of England.

The Goins Brothers Band of Prestonsburg will perform in Morehead's Mountain Music Concert shortly after having returned from the World's Fair in Knoxville.

Members of the band have played with the Lonesome Pine Fiddlers and with both Ralph Stanley and Bill Monroe. The band has performed at the Grand Ole Opry in Nashville and at major Bluegrass festivals around the nation. They have 14 record albums to their credit and have represented Kentucky in concert at the Smithsonian Institute.

MSU's Mountain Music Concert promises an appropriate finale to a week-long festive celebration and will be followed by traditional mountain dancing. Both the concert and the dance are free and open to the public.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Two prominent Eastern Kentuckians have been appointed by Gov. John Y. Brown Jr. to six-year terms on the Morehead State University Board of Regents.

Named to terms expiring March 31, 1988, were Harry LaViers Jr., of Irvine and Dr. Forest M. Skaggs of Lynch. LaViers succeeds Cloyd McDowell of Williamsburg and Dr. Skaggs replaces Billy Joe Hall of Mt. Sterling.

LaViers is president of South-East Coal Co. of Irvine and is a graduate of Princeton University. A former member of the Kentucky Council on Higher Education, he is the second member of his family to serve on the MSU board. His late father was a member from 1942 to 1944.

Dr. Skaggs is an alumnus of MSU and the University of Louisville. He began the practice of dentistry in Salyersville in 1947 and moved to Lynch in 1950. He served 13 years on the Lynch Board of Education.

MSU President Morris L. Norfleet said of the appointments:

"We are pleased with Gov. Brown's decision to continue the practice of appointing outstanding citizens to our Board of Regents. Neither of these men are strangers to our campus. Dr. Skaggs did most of his pre-dental studies here and Mr. LaViers will resume his family's association with our institution. We are confident that the University will benefit greatly from their service as Regents."

(more)
LaViers is a native of Paintsville and Dr. Skaggs is a native of Salyersville.

Of the two board members who are departing, Dr. Norfleet said:

"Both were valuable members of the board and loyal supporters of the University. We are fortunate that Mr. Hall will continue his service to public higher education as a member of the Council on Higher Education. Mr. McDowell made a lasting contribution during his 16 years on the board. He personally gave leadership to our mining technology program and as chairman of the academic affairs committee of the board. The University is deeply indebted to both of these fine individuals."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Everyone is aware of the large number of Japanese exports coming into the United States. One we could do without is the outdoor pest "Popillia japonica," commonly known as the Japanese beetle.

When they attack each summer from late June until September, they often do serious damage to foliage.

"If you have the proper adult foods in your yard," says Dr. Gerald L. DeMoss, associate professor of biology at Morehead State University, "you'll have Japanese beetles."

Dr. DeMoss cites members of the rose family, as a treat for the shiny green and copper colored pests, as well as cherry, apple, peach and plum trees, grape vines and corn silks and ornamentals such as marigolds and other, fragrant flowers.

"They like plants which are aromatic," he says of the beetles, which feed on 305 varieties of plants in North America.

The beetle was unintentionally imported to this country from Japan in 1916 with some nursery stock. The insect damages plants by "skeletonizing" the leaves.

"They defoliate the plant by eating the tissue out between the veins of the leaves," he explains. "This causes a netting effect, causing the leaf to die."

"They always feed on upper leaves first and work their way down, because they like to feed in the sunlight. In the case of blooms, they eat the flower, too."

Damage can range from 15 to 100 percent defoliation. But, according to Dr. DeMoss, some of the most serious damage is caused where we cannot see it.

(more)
"The damage to grasses is equally serious," he says. "During the fall and spring, the larvae feed on the roots of grasses. Any place where there is a lot of turf, you'll have a good place for Japanese beetles to occur."

Because of this habit, and because the beetles migrate readily, control is made more difficult.

"And since this is an introduced organism, it does not have natural predators or parasites here," Dr. DeMoss says. "Not many birds, except starlings and chickens, will eat them."

A dust of milky spore bacteria, which kills the larvae, can be sprayed on turf as a control. The problem with controlling Japanese beetles is that unless a wide area is controlled, it is a waste of time.

"If I treat my yard and you don't treat yours, I've wasted my time," Dr. DeMoss says, adding that spraying will improve the appearance of a lawn.

Another method of control is to trap the adults. Sharon Stahl Cox, a 1980 graduate student in biology at MSU, collected 440,000 beetles during a study on the effectiveness of certain traps and lures.

One type of trap is a reusable cannister type which uses floral lures. The other trap tested is a disposable bag trap, which uses a combination of floral lures and sexual attractants.

Study results indicated the bag trap attracts more beetles during the peak periods of activity in June and July, but the reusable cannister trap costs less to use.

"The traps need to be supplemented with spraying to really make a dent in the beetle population," Dr. DeMoss adds.

Meanwhile, the pests are spreading. From their initial introduction into New Jersey, they have spread as far north as Canada, as far south as Georgia, and as far west as Illinois. But Dr. DeMoss does not see them stopping there.

"Great pains have been taken to prevent infestation to the Western states, yet they have been collected in California," he says. "So they have spread across the North American Continent."

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- A publication party in honor of Jesse Stuart's newest book will be staged here Wednesday afternoon in conjunction with MSU's Jesse Stuart Symposium, a part of the sixth annual Appalachian Celebration.

"Land of the Honey-Colored Wind," a collection of Stuart's poems and short stories, was published by Remley of New York under the auspices of the Jesse Stuart Foundation, Inc. Dr. Jerry Herndon of Murray State University was the editor.

"We are looking forward to recognizing those involved in bringing this outstanding volume to the homes, libraries and schools of Kentucky and the nation," said MSU President Morris L. Norfleet, chairman of the Stuart Foundation's Board of Directors.

In addition to Dr. Herndon and the publishers, the party also will include Doug and Karen Adams of Morehead who illustrated the book and those in the Kentucky Department of Education who assisted in making the book available to school libraries throughout the state.

The Stuart family will be represented by the author's brother, James Stuart of Greenup County.

The event is scheduled from 4 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. in the Eagle Room of the Adron Doran University Center.

Copies of the book will be available to those who become associates of the Jesse Stuart Foundation through cash gifts.

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- "I already have four dulcimers," the dark-haired woman says, tightening C-clamps on what will soon be her fifth instrument. "But this is the first I've made."

Making one of Appalachia's traditional musical instruments may sound like hard work but for Jacqueline Hunt of Ashland, Morehead State University's Appalachian Celebration "is my first vacation ever."

A secretary and occasional ceramics teacher, Mrs. Hunt worked five hours a day making the stringed instrument in a dulcimer construction workshop during the weeklong celebration.

"Playing a dulcimer is very good therapy after a day at work," she notes. "I play and sing for my grandchildren. I love the oldtime music. It's a shame it's not been passed on more."

At the next woodworking table, Don Bowlby of Greencastle, Ind., is waiting for the glue to dry on his instrument. It's his third dulcimer from scratch—"I also made a couple from kits!"—and his third year at the annual MSU activity.

Bowlby says learning to play a dulcimer is easy. "I was 40 years old and had never played an instrument when I started. I took the dulcimer playing class here last year and my wife's in it this year."

Lettie Lepanto, a retired librarian from Middletown, Ky., is also attending the dulcimer-playing class, "but I don't have anything to play yet," she says, looking down at the clamped-together pieces of wood which will be making music by the weekend.

"This is my first time here," she says. "It's great, the campus is beautiful and we have a very good instructor."

(more)
Bill Bryant, who has taught dulcimer construction at Appalachian Celebrations for six years, leans over to help one man curve a sidepiece to fit the face of the dulcimer. Bryant taught art at MSU from 1974 until 1976, and is now head of the Northwestern State University art faculty in Nachtoches, La.

"I can't wait to hear it play," Bryant says when conversation turns to Richard Stephens' unusually shaped dulcimer.

Stephens, a 16-year-old from Centralia, Ill., has designed a dulcimer which resembles a miniature V-shaped electric guitar. "I got the idea from a rock concert I went to," says Stephens, who also has built dulcimers along more traditional lines.

Stephens, whose father, Ed, teaches the celebration's dulcimer-playing course, plays the instrument while holding it like a guitar rather than laying it across his lap. His dulcimer music is also sometimes non-traditional. "I play anything," he says. "A friend's teaching me to play a rock and roll song on one."

This is Stephens' second year at the Appalachian Celebration. Other participants are planning to return next year.

"I may take my second vacation here next year," says Mrs. Hunt.
MOREHEAD, Ky. --- Morehead State University is offering a course entitled "English for Standardized Tests," ENG 598, at Pikeville College during Summer Session II which starts Tuesday, July 6.

Coursework includes sample work with SAT, ACT, GRE, GMAT and other standardized tests, vocabulary development, reading comprehension, methodology in taking objective examination and Venn diagrams.

The class is scheduled Thursdays from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m., and Fridays from 8 a.m. to noon. It carries three semester hours of credit.

MOREHEAD, Ky. — Morehead State University's new "Coal Bibliography, Part 1," a 60-page Appalachian coal energy reference manual, now is available to the public.

"It includes every topic related to coal and coal mining from A to Z that we've listed in our Camden-Carroll Library, including books, pamphlets, periodicals and government publications," says Faye Belcher, MSU's associate director of libraries.

MSU's library staff developed the Coal Bibliography as part of the Kentucky Coal Information Network (KCIN) with funds from MSU's Energy Research Laboratory.

The Coal Bibliography will be useful to students, coal miners and operators, landowners, environmentalists and other Kentucky groups, according to Ms. Belcher.

"We also plan to update the bibliography," Ms. Belcher added, "because it only reflects the holdings we have up to a certain time. We will publish a second part and later expand it into fossil energy."

The Coal Bibliography's materials are available at MSU or the nearest library where an inter-library loan can be initiated.

The Coal Bibliography will be distributed free to KCIN members and to various coal companies. Sales of the bibliography at $5 per copy will be used to fund additional copies.

Additional information is available from Dr. Jack Ellis or Ms. Belcher at (606) 783-2143 or 2142.
