BOY TWISTS LION'S TAIL

Little Gabriel Klein, 7, twisted the lion's tail at the Bronx Zoo and yesterday it cost his father five bucks.

Adam, the lion, was backed up against the bars with his tail hanging out and it tantalized Gabriel, who climbed over an outside guard rail and tweaked the appendage.

The lion roared and made a pass at Gabriel, and Gabriel's father quickly grabbed him back over the guard rail. Gabriel let out a yell and up ran Patrolman Michael McEnery.

The officer suggested in Magistrate's court that the father, William Klein, was at fault in the transaction, because: "The said child did pull the tail of the lion, thereby exposing said child to personal danger, in violation of Chapter 17, Section 19."

Zeev pleaded guilty and paid the fine.

Reds Play Bruins Friday, August 20

Nocturnal Contest, With Fireworks Scheduled At Cincinnati

The Cincinnati Reds and the Chicago Cubs will meet in a night game at Crosley Field Friday, August 20. The two teams were to play their first and only game under the lights at the Cincinnati park last Monday, July 15, but an exceedingly heavy five o'clock rain caused postponement.

The revised schedule means that the Reds and Cubs will battle on the evening of Friday, August 20, instead of in the afternoon and that the two teams will make up for the postponed contest by playing a double header Sunday, August 21.

Tickets purchased for the postponed night game with the Cubs will be honored at the next night game with the Phillies, July 20. However, any holders of tickets who do not plan to attend the next night game should immediately contact the Red's downtown ticket office located in the Henry Straus Cigar Store, Sixth and Walnut Streets, and either exchange their tickets or receive a refund for them.

The Fall Garden In June we plant the fall garden in cases where earlier vegetables stood. Crops that can mature before frost will be of value, and it is better than letting these spots grow up weeds.

The ground should be prepared in the same way as when the spring sowing of beets was made. If it can be had, some manure should be worked into the seed bed, and fertilizer used besides.

If seed is sown before July, Detroit Dark Red is the variety to use, for it matures large beets in good storing condition, by the time the first frost may be expected.

Whatever varieties are used, there will be some small beets too immature and tender to store without shriveling, but these may be canned. An excellent by product, too, is best-top "greens" to provide a change from the diet that may have become somewhat monotonous by late summer.

Gov. Chandler Endorses Z. Taylor For Young For Representative Of Bath And Rowan District Favorable Legislation For Morehead College One Of Young's Principal Interests

Kentucky's Chief Executive Calls Upon All Friends Of The Administration To Battle For His Election

FAVORABLE LEGISLATION NEEDED TO CARRY OUT HAPPY'S PROGRAM

Pointing to the record of his administration since he took office almost two years ago, Kentucky's Governor A. B. "Happy" Chandler today called upon the people of the Commonwealth to support his candidates for the legislature so that he will have a favorable Assembly during the last half of his Governorship and to insure the carrying out of the program of a "Greater Kentucky."

The Governor, in no uncertain terms, endorsed Z. Taylor Young, of Morehead, as the Administration candidate for Representative from the 96th Legislative district, composed of Bath and Rowan Counties.

The Governor's endorsement of Mr. Young did not come as a surprise since it has been conceded for many weeks that the Administration would support the Morehead man. Mr. Young and the Governor have been intimate friends for many years, while the late Senator Allie W. Young, father of the Representative candidate, was perhaps the closest friend, ally and colleague that Governor Chandler has ever had.

Although the endorsement of Mr. Young as the Administration candidate was anticipated and expected, the endorsement from Frankfort came only after the unanimous approval of the "board of strategy" which has so successfully carried the Administration to new victory heights in the state.

The Administration felt that in endorsing Mr. Young they were supporting the man most able to help in carrying out the Governor's policies, such as balancing the state budget, placing the tax burden where it will be least felt, forever stamping out the sales tax, a broad and humane program for the state penal and charitable institutions, for the advancement of the Morehead State Teachers College which is one of the State's greatest institutions, for building a better road system. In fact for everything that the Administration has launched to make Kentucky a better state in which to live and to bring to the Commonwealth a system of government for the common man and of the people.

When Governor Chandler was a candidate for Kentucky's highest elective office he was supported by Mr. Young who made a determined and good fight for him.

Party Agreement Stipulates This Is Rowan's Time To Name Representative

Taylor Young Is Only Native Of Rowan County Whose Name Will Appear On Ballot For Representative

An agreement, made by our forefathers, and abided by these many years stipulates that this is Rowan County's time to name the Representative from the Bath and Rowan county district. To violate this agreement now would be to throw the traditions and policies of our forefathers aside and to eventually cause turmoil and friction between the counties of Bath and Rowan, which history shows have always worked harmoniously, hand in hand, as neighbors, for the advancement and betterment of each other.

There is no reason why this agreement should be violated now. There is, however, a reason, which has worked successfully in the past for all concerned, should be abided by for the benefit of every Rowan and Bath Countyman.

Taylor Young Pledges If Elected He Will Seek No Position At The Hands Of The Present Administration In State

Equal Rights For All Constituents Carried In His Platform

Mr. Young is at present employed at the Morehead State Teachers College, which position he has held for a number of years. He has been re-employed in this position for the year ending September, 1938. If elected to the position of Representative, he will ask for a Leave of Absence from the session of the legislature, and will return to the place when his Frankfort duties are finished.

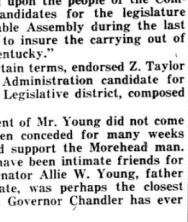

Mr. Young pledges that if the voters of this district honor him with the important office of Representative that he will not seek nor ask for himself any of the job or position at the hands of this administration.

By seeking no place for himself, other than that which he has held for years, and was elected to for another year before he announced for Representative, Mr. Young places himself under no obligation which he would necessarily have to be under, should a political job through the sought a position he seeks as Representative.

He believes that in the distribution of patronage that it should be divided equally among the con-

Governor Chandler Lauds Life's Work Of Senator Young

Tells Graduating Class At Morehead College To Carry On For Him

ALLIE W. YOUNG

Speaking in the spacious chapel of the Morehead State Teachers College to the June graduating class, Governor A. B. Chandler lauded the life of Senator Allie W. Young for the inspiration to carry forward through life's battles.

"Allie Young was one of the greatest statesmen, one of the most honest and conscientious men that Kentucky has ever had," the Governor declared. "His vision, plus his knowledge and influence in the legislative halls of the State enabled him to live a life of usefulness for all of Kentucky."

"No man was ever a greater friend of mine than was Allie Young. It was his guidance and assistance that many times helped me to carry on. The credit for this great institution, from which you are graduating should go to him. He believed in advancing the progress of education in Kentucky and the Morehead State Teachers College is a product of his life, opening the gateway to Kentucky's boys and girls."

The Governor said his last visit to Morehead was a sad one, for it was the funeral of Senator Young. He sketched many of the accomplishments that Allie Young had given to all the people of Kentucky and declared that his death was one of the greatest losses that the Commonwealth suffered during its entire existence.

Vote For The Man That Is Qualified

The election of a Representative is vastly different from that of naming your county officers. The county officials hold office here at home—they mingle, associate and work with you day after day.

When you elect a Representative you are sending a man to the State's highest legislative halls—many miles away from you. There he must associate with men from every part of Kentucky, all of whom either have had an influence in the passing of legislation. It is necessary that if our Representative is to secure legislation favorable to our district, he must, of necessity, be a man who is acquainted and versed with the tactics of the legislature, and is making his job. It is to the interest of a district to place a man in this position who works with this majority for them but can ask and secure the passage of bills that will help his constituents. If he is a Representative who is in opposition to those who are in control, it is likely that the schools, roads, the public buildings and State enterprises in that district will be relegated in favor of the districts that send the more favorable legislators.

Through his association of many years with his father at Frankfort, Mr. Young will go to the State Capitol with many friends and acquaintances who are powerful in the Assembly. He would be able to make his voice heard over any other man the people of Bath and Rowan Counties might elect as Representative.

A vote for Young is a vote against the sales tax, and favors the interests of this district, and feels that every man should hold an equal right for a job based upon his ability and merits.

Promises To Render Best Service That Is In Him

To the Democrats of the Ninety-Sixth Legislative District: Some weeks ago I acquainted my friends with the fact that I have an ambition to serve the people of Rowan and Bath counties in the lower House of the General Assembly and now make formal announcement of my candidacy, subject to the action of the Democratic party at the state primary to be held August 7th next.

While never an offensive partisan, but giving to every voter the right to his opinion, I have always been an active, working Democrat and believe in the principles of that party and have done my bit in upholding its best traditions.

The people may be assured that I will support education, the Morehead State Teachers College in particular; the best interests of the farmer and laboring man; improvement of roads and highways; agricultural assistance; economy, consistent with good government in all state departments and in short will give the people the best service that is in me.

I know something of the aims and purposes of my illustrious father, the late Senator Allie W. Young, and shall so conduct myself, if chosen as your Representative, as to add luster to his already distinguished name.

Soliciting your vote and influence and thanking you in advance for your favorable consideration, I remain,

Cordially yours,
Z. TAYLOR YOUNG

Promises To Vote And Use Influence For Old Age Legislation In Kentucky

The program of President Roosevelt and Governor Chandler enabled Kentucky to provide old age assistance this year for its citizens, who had lived a life of usefulness, were past their productive age. These people had, in their families, supported their State and their Nation, paid their taxes and had been the good citizens of a few years ago.

Mr. Young believes that the last few miles of Rowan and Bath County's aged citizens should be made as easy, enjoyable and comfortable as it is possible for the State and Nation to provide. If Mr. Young is nominated and elected to the next session of the legislature, he will help make laws and appropriations looking forward to a substantial increase in the pensions already granted and an investigation of the circumstances and needs of those applicants who so justly deserve this humane assistance.

Mr. Young pledges to introduce or support a bill during the next session of the legislature, if he is elected to the halls of the Assembly, providing for an increase in the pensions already granted, and a more thorough and liberal investigation of all applications.

This will not only mean justifiable assistance for those who need and deserve it but will mean more money coming into Rowan and Bath counties that will be spent by the people for the necessities of life. He realizes that a great forward step has been taken toward old-age assistance, but at the same time knows that there is much yet to be done, and that he will always use his vote and influence at the State Capitol to make the final journey of our respected and aged citizens as useful and happy as they so richly are entitled to because of their unselfish contribution to the posterity of their community, county, state and nation.

Governor Chandler's endorsement of Mr. Young's candidacy is the culmination and realization of the Chief Executive's promise to make the final journey of our respected and aged citizens towards the passing of this legislation.

Governor Chandler brought old-age assistance to Kentucky and if given a legislature composed of men such as Z. Taylor Young, he can carry through his program for increased old age pensions and a more liberal interpretation of its aims.

He pledges that if nominated to the legislature from this district, no matter how poor, down-trodden or humble he may be, will always secure an audience with him, and at all times whether it be at Owingsville, Morehead, Frankfort or any other place, any time of the day or night. Furthermore, he pledges that no matter how impudently that he do something that he will say "No" when "No" is right.

Young Believes In $15 Per Capita To Kentucky Schools

Free Text-Books For All Eight Grades In Platform Of Morehead Man

In the entire history of the State of Kentucky there has never been a $12 per capita until Governor Chandler assumed office. However, even this amount, unprecedented in Kentucky, is not sufficient to place the common school on the same level with those of most other states and the Governor realizes this. Taylor Young stands for a minimum per capita of $15 for the common schools, for he believes that if they need this amount in order to successfully operate.

A $15 per capita would enable many school districts in Bath and Rowan County to consolidate. It would mean improvements in buildings, in libraries, but most important of all it will enable the Boards of Education of the two counties to raise teacher's pay. This will bring better qualified teachers into our school systems, so that the boys and girls of Bath and Rowan Counties—our children—may secure a full education to qualify them for the battle that they must fight through life.

Free text-books, long a dream and now a reality, have given to children who might have been denied schooling through inability of parents to pay for the books, are now enjoying the same educational opportunities of those more fortunate, and the money that was once used by the parent in the purchase of school books is now used to provide the necessities of life. Mr. Young promises his support of this program and the adherence to it of free text-books for all eight grades.

To give him a mandate so large that there shall be no mistake but that he represents the masses rather than the privileged few.

There is no clan or clique of people either in Rowan or Bath Counties whom Taylor Young is tied. He is running this campaign on his own merits, free from any slinging and ill reference to any of his opponents or to any person or group of persons who may oppose him.

He pledges that he will be controlled by no group, and asks the people to give him a mandate so large that there shall be no mistake but that he represents the masses rather than the privileged few.

He further states that whoever the Democratic nominee may be he will, in November, support him with his vote and will work towards his and the entire Democratic ticket's election.

A vote for Taylor Young is a vote for better roads and better schools in Rowan and Bath counties.

WILLIAM JOYCE COWEN'S THEY GOT HIM AGAIN

THE STORY THUS FAR: When Fred Willis thought to be dead, escapes from a German prison camp, he finds his closest buddy, Jimmy Davis, engaged to the girl he loves, Rose Duffy. Rather than ruin Jimmy's happiness, Fred sacrifices his own interests, and tells Rose he is already married. Back at his job of circus Barker after the war Fred unexpectedly encounters Jimmy, and is stunned to find out that he is a gang leader, involved in a series of murders. He pleads futilely with Jimmy to give it up, then sees Rose privately and begs her to go away. She scornfully accuses Fred of misrepresenting Jimmy to gain his own ends.

CHAPTER EIGHT All the way home Rose was turning over in her mind the things Fred had said. Her pride had made it mandatory that she answer him defiantly. But suppose, just suppose, he was right? And perhaps he might have been acting from unselfish motives. There were many suspicious tag-ends, which, if placed in their right order, would make a sinister pattern in her mind. It was horrible to have such thoughts about a man whom she had loved. She must know. She had to get at the bottom of it without any other instant's delay. Either she must prove that it was all a fantastic and vicious untruth or she had to go away. She hurried up the steps, opened the door, and called out Jimmy's name. She ran from room to room. He was not at home. Opening the telephone book, and running a trembling finger up and down the pages she came to

to the name, Merchants' Protective Association. She repeated the address to herself, several times, then slipped on her hat and coat, starting out again. The dingy numerals spelling out the address she sought reposed on a vacant spot. There was an open, stairway leading to the second floor. Rose forced herself to walk up the stairs. She reached a glass door with the name Merchants' Protective Association lettered on it. After a moment's hesitation she stopped listening to her own heart beat and entered. The space inside was indicated of having originally been the way to an office, with a half dozen neatly spaced desks, some chairs, a bench and a couple of second-hand knock-knocks. In the rear was a frosted glass partition, running three-quarters of the way to the ceiling. No one was visible anywhere. Standing there tense and irresolute, Rose suddenly became conscious of a low-pitched, bee-like, droning voice. It came from somewhere in the rear. Steeling herself to be calm, Rose slid a chair toward the partition. Noislessly she got upon it, and raising he head inch by inch, peered over. Standing with his back to her, on one side of the rickety table, was Jimmy. Facing him were five extra-ordinarily tough looking policemen. At least they were outfitted in policemen's uniforms. Rose almost cried out. Only by a tremendous effort could she restrain herself. "So you got out of here wearing your civilian clothes over your uniforms," Jimmy was saying. "And if any of you is picked up you're on your way to a fancy dress party. I'll be taking the risk. I got all of the machinery in the back of the truck. We don't want nobody picked up for carrying a rod before we get to 'em." He paused and looked around with a light-lipped smile. "I suppose some of you boys know they're going out three years now for carrying a rod?" There was an appreciative quiver in the grin. Jimmy waited a moment, and then went in a decisive manner. "Now get this in half an hour, pick you up at the poolroom on the corner of State and Danton. I drive you the two blocks to the garage, and you pile out like you are now—" "What if some real bulls show up while we're working inside?" "Nobody's going to interfere with the police," retorted Jimmy. "And if they do I'm there on the truck." "O. K.," murmured his listeners. The light on Jimmy's face was bright. "Sure. There won't be any trouble. You go in there like you was cops, and when you yell that way none of 'em won't put their hands on it, there's no reason why any of the mugs should get into anything. And listen, I don't want no time fooled away with a lot of crazy trigger work. Sight on where you're shooting. That way none of 'em won't be giving out interviews to the evening papers. Any questions?" "What about when we come out?" "Pile right in behind me. We drive down Swan Avenue, as far as the river, and we get in line to give the photographer some fun. Let's go!" The break-up occurred so unexpectedly that Rose had no time to get out of the way. She crouched where she was frozen, immobile, speechless. But they were not coming into the front office. In a body they went back to the rear elevator. The door closed behind them. Rose might have fainted, but she had no time. Now that she knew everything, she must think quick. She saw a lightning-like rapidity. She struck her legs to restore the circulation, ran down the stairs, hurried to a sign shop on the corner, and into a telephone booth. "Give me police headquarters!" she told the operator in a tense, sibilant voice. In a moment she had the connection. "Hello! Listen carefully. In about twenty-five minutes a mug will be stopping at the corner of State and Danton Streets. The driver will be armed. Never mind who I am!" Her voice broke. "Only don't fail! You've got to get there on time!" She hung up the receiver, and, clinging for support to the telephone transmitter, began to shake with sobs. A gimlet eyed, expressionless attendant turned his key in a cell lock. He motioned to Jimmy as he pointed to a door at the end of the corridor. "She's in there. You got about fifteen minutes." Jimmy, blinking at the change of light, entered the designated room. One side was partitioned off with wire netting. Rose was standing outside. Her face revealed the emotional strain through which she had passed. "Well, now you know," he said simply. "Yes, Jimmy," she answered. "Now I know." He turned his face away, unseeing. "I figured maybe you wouldn't able to bear her hurt, compassionate look. "The dear wife," she replied. Her hand was extended. Jimmy saw it out of the corner of his eye and reached forward with his hand. "I ought to have known you'd be like this," he said. He paused for a moment then continued, half smiling. "Listen, I'm going to beat this rap." "But, Jimmy, you're guilty!" "Not having a god's smart lawyer for? He's pulled lots of the boys out of tight spots. I'll be back home before you know it." "And then—Jimmy's gaze was challenging. "I suppose you've made some plans?" "My first job is to look for the citizen that tipped the cops off. Want to know who it was?" She stared at him, as he shifted his feet double-crossing steel in the world, my pal, Fred Willis!" Rose shook her head, and she spoke not with any anger, but in tender remembrance. "You're wrong, Jimmy. I did it. I came to the office, all alone, and I listened. Then I phoned the police." His fingers gripped the wire. A maniacal look flickered through his eyes. He started for the door with the virulence of his feelings. "What are you going to do, Jimmy?" she asked quietly. "Kill me!" He made no answer. The blood drained from his face, his arms fell heavily to his sides. Slowly he turned and started for the opposite side of the room. "Jimmy!" she screamed. "Come back! You don't understand! I had to do this! Wait!" He knocked on the door for the guard. "You've got to go through it and let them punish you, so when it's over you can come out and look up to whatever it is, watch-oh over the world and say, 'I'm clean.'" She might as well have been talking to a stone. The guard opened the door and stood aside for Jimmy to pass through. "Jimmy," she cried in a last vain attempt. "I only wanted to honor you in my heart. I wanted to be so proud of my husband!" He was gone. Rose hurried her face in her hands. Copyright 1937—Loew's Inc. (To be continued.)

LATE POTATOES Even though potatoes may appear to be enough potatoes to feed the family for the year, there may be disappointment in their keeping so long they may all be used because spring potatoes such as Irish Cobbler, Bliss Triumph and Early Ohio sometimes sprout before they are dug and become worthless before Christmas. Those persons whose aim it is to provide potatoes for the year should plant a late crop in July. Several varieties offer. There is, first, that class of "July" potatoes that includes McCormick, French, Peachblow and Giant, all of which, sprouting slowly, can be kept in quite ordinary storage, with no trouble. Another variety is Irish Cobbler, whose seed must have been kept in cold storage. Still others are Russet Rural and Green Mountain, direct from the cool cellars of northern growers. The best preparation for late potato land would have been to have it broken 6 weeks or two months ago and harrowed and dragged several times, so that weeds as they started. If planting late potatoes could not have been done in the spring, they should be broken just before the crop is to go in, for there has been an abundance of moisture in most parts of Kentucky. Ordinarily, it would be proper to turn under whatever growth there is. Late as this is, the best is to remove whatever weeds and garden debris there are before breaking, because of the uncertainty of rains adequate to rot down this material. Early greens land, or cabbage land, or that portion where grew the early peas or even the first planting of beans, may be used. Inasmuch as a deep seedbed is desirable, the surface should be cut deeply with a heavy hoe or with a disk harrow, before breaking. In a deep seedbed, the potatoes' requirements as to moisture and as to coolness are met. This, inadvertently, helps the scab situation. As with spring potatoes, commercial fertilizing should be used, but because of warm temperatures having released fertility already in the soil, as in a manured garden, less fertilizer nitrogen is needed. Fertilizer may be used in 5-10-5 or 6-10-6, and the amount may be smaller. One pound to 35 feet of row, under the seed, and worked in, is enough. Planting depth for a late crop should be greater than for the potatoes planted in the spring, when there was assurance of moisture, and when there was, in fact, likelihood of too much. Five inches or even 6 inches, is not too deep. The furrow should not be filled immediately, but only an inch or two of soil drawn over the seed, and the rest when the tops are tall enough. Cultivation for late potatoes should be designed to save to the crop all possible moisture. The surface should be kept level and the soil should be stirred shallowly, merely enough to kill weeds as they start. In fact, good late potato crops have been produced with no cultivating whatsoever when the year's weeds were destroyed in fitting the land for the crop. Late potato pests are the flea-beetles and the leafhoppers, and sometimes, the remnants of the spring brood of the Colorado beetle. A control for all three is to spray with Bordeaux mixture to which calcium arsenate has been added. (For the Colorado beetle) and Black Leaf 40 (for the hopper). Generally, two sprayings are sufficient, the first when the potatoes are all up, and the second two weeks later. Six hundred checks started the first of June by J. Ray Rice, Hartman county, have made satisfactory growth.
