1986 Kentucky Logging Show

Sept. 20 and 21

Morehead, KY

Co-Sponsored by Kentucky Forest Industries Association and Morehead State University

For Immediate Release

MOREHEAD, Ky. --- The Kentucky Logging Show will return to Rowan County in 1986, it was announced here Tuesday by the Kentucky Forest Industries Association.

KFIA Executive Director Harry Ryan said the annual exposition is scheduled Saturday, Sept. 20, and Sunday, Sept. 21, at Morehead State University's Derrickson Agricultural Complex, three miles north of Morehead on Ky. 377.

Ryan also announced that the 1987 show will be staged at Bowling Green, site of the 1985 event. The Logging Show was established in Rowan County in 1983 and recreated here in 1984.

The show includes equipment displays, lumberjack competition, loader and skidder demonstrations, antique equipment exhibits and horse and mule pulling contests. The two-day event spotlights Kentucky's forest products and their importance to the state and national economy.

Co-sponsored by KFIA and MSU, the 1986 show also will be assisted by the Morehead Tourism Commission and the Morehead and Rowan County Chamber of Commerce.

"We are pleased to return the Kentucky Logging Show to the place of its birth here in one of the centers of the state's lumber industry," Ryan told a press conference audience of reporters and business leaders. "We are looking forward to an outstanding exposition."

MOREHEAD, Ky.--Fifty-one purebred bulls were weighed in at the start of the second annual Northeast Kentucky Beef Improvement Federation (NKBIF) bull performance testing program.

The program is a cooperative effort by NKBIF and Morehead State University and is conducted on the University farm. MSU agriculture and veterinarian technology students assist in the project which identifies superior bulls through a test for weight gain and growth.

The bulls were consigned to the program by 28 breeders from 10 northeast Kentucky counties and several Southern Ohio counties. The bulls had an average adjusted weaning weight of 578 pounds and an average adjusted frame score of 5.65.

According to Dr. Andrew C. Boston, MSU professor of agriculture, the bull's weight is adjusted according to age. "Our next step will be the midtest weigh-in where we will get an indication of how quickly these bulls are gaining weight and growing," he said.

Sire selection is one of the most important decisions for a cattle producer, according to Phil Kenkel, agri-business specialist at MSU's Appalachian Development Center. "The herd bull is responsible for 50 percent of the potential of the entire calf crop and if a producer keeps heifers for herd replacements, nearly 90 percent of the genetic make-up of the herd can be affected by the sire selection," Kenkel said.

Following the test, a sale--scheduled for March--will be conducted for qualifying bulls. The sale offers producers a rare opportunity to select superior sires for their herds, Kenkel said.

Additional information may be obtained by calling Kenkel at (606) 783-2077.

MOREHEAD, Ky.--Bruce E. Heasley has been named associate director of admissions at Morehead State University.

His appointment, effective Dec. 15, was announced by Dr. Roberta T. Anderson, MSU vice president for academic affairs. Heasley currently is coordinator of information systems for Pennsylvania State University's Undergraduate Admissions Office.

Heasley will be responsible for managing the internal operations of MSU's Office of Admissions and for tracking scholarship applications, according to the vice president.

"With close to a decade of experience in the admissions field at Penn State, Mr. Heasley brings to MSU numerous professional strengths--one of which is his work in developing and implementing computer systems for student records," Dr. Anderson said. "This will be an invaluable aid to the University as we intensify our recruitment efforts."

Heasley, who has held posts as admissions counselor and operations supervisor at Penn State, has been involved in all phases of admissions. He has been involved in planning, implementing and assisting in the overall organization of training for Penn State's new student system segment of the school's on-line Administrative Information System.

A former high school vocational agriculture teacher, Heasley earned his B.S. degree from Penn State and has done graduate work in counseling and adult education. He also has taken additional course work in management and computer program languages.

MOREHEAD, Ky.--Morehead State University will hold its Winter Commencement at 1:30 p.m. Saturday, Dec. 14, in Button Auditorium.

Approximately 300 undergraduate and graduate students are candidates for degrees to be conferred by MSU President Herb. F. Reinhard Jr.

Commencement speakers will include MSU Board of Regents Chairman Robert M. Duncan of Inez, Dr. Reinhard and Sigmund Bachmann of Switzerland.

Bachmann, a candidate for the B.S. degree in agricultural science with a general agriculture option, was chosen to represent the graduating class by the college deans and Dr. Roberta Anderson, vice president for academic affairs.

While graduating this semester with a 3.92 grade point average, Bachmann will remain at MSU to complete his student teaching at Bath County High School where he will be teaching freshmen and sophomores.

Bachmann has been a work-study student assigned to the Derrickson Agricultural Complex, where he tended the farm animals. His goal is to remain in the United States as a farm manager.

MSU Alumni Association President David Bolt of Morehead will welcome graduates into the Alumni Association.

Dr. Gary C. Cox, professor of geography, will be grand marshal for commencement. Faculty marshals will be Alex Conyers, associate professor of finance, and Dr. John Philley, Department of Physical Sciences chair.

MSU ENGLISH PROFESSORS PRODUCE BOOK

Drs. Glenn and Judy Rogers of Morehead State University's English faculty not only are proud of their publication, a textbook which is being adopted by a number of colleges and universities nationwide, but also of their two young sons.

By Kenn Johnson
MSU Staff Writer

MOREHEAD, Ky.--Adoptions have "come in bunches" for two Morehead State University professors.

For Drs. Glenn and Judy Rogers (Ph.D.s, English professors, each married to the other) the term "adoption" may refer to either their children or a book they have written together. They are proud of both.

The children are John and James, adopted in 1982 and 1985, respectively. The book is Patterns and Themes: A Basic English Reader, a textbook the Rogers wrote together that is currently being adopted by English departments at colleges and universities throughout the nation for use in developmental writing classes.

"We wanted a book and a baby," Judy said, "but not at the same time."

The Rogers signed a book contract with Wadsworth Publishing Co. in November 1982, just two months after adopting John. Initially, the simultaneous responsibilities of nurturing both child and book created a problem for the Rogers, whose usual evening writing time was supplanted by the chores of child rearing.

"It was difficult at first," Judy said, "but we knew that textbooks are usually written by professors at larger metropolitan universities. For us, writing a book was an opportunity that wouldn't come back soon. Therefore, it was no problem to adjust our schedules to accommodate teaching, writing, and the baby."

Although the Rogers planned diligently for the adoption of the children, the book came into being in a more haphazard manner. Because the Rogers had been unable to find a textbook they deemed suitable for teaching basic writing to freshmen, they had accumulated an assortment of materials, theories, and techniques they used instead of a formal text.

A visiting marketing executive for Wadsworth listened to their theory on the instruction of developmental writing classes and suggested they should not search any further for a text, but should write their own.

Reading and writing are so closely related, the Rogers maintain, that the two subjects should be taught together and not consigned to separate courses, the traditional teaching method. Their book, which was published this year, integrates reading and writing by providing brief stories, essays, and poems which are followed by writing assignments. The readings are designed to provoke ideas and suggest simple writing patterns.

"The primary audience for our book is the basic or developmental writing student," Glenn said. "While the average freshman reads on a tenth grade level, many students enter college with reading skills of just a seventh grade level."

"It is the rare student who is reading on the appropriate level," Judy added. "We found that anything we can do to make reading immediately rewarding helps them write."

The book's reading selections come from popular books and magazines and were written by such diverse authors as Martin Luther King Jr., Robert Frost, John Updike, Eudora Welty, Garrison Keillor, and five MSU students whose classroom exercises also were included.

The readings were chosen for their "high interest and low readability," Judy said. "But remember that low readability does not mean complexity of thought. It only refers to the number of syllables per word, words per sentence, and the number of unfamiliar words included."

"Ideas are another matter," Glenn added. "The selections in our book are interesting to persons on various reading levels. Complexity of thought and readability are separate entities."

Glenn said that the number of schools which ultimately will adopt the book may depend on the pervasiveness of what he calls "the textbook bias."

"Too often instructors are looking for a text that provides short assignments and workbook drills in grammar and punctuation," he said. "But they should know that these students come to college still read on the seventh grade level because they have had that type of instruction for 12 years."

"We feel we can clean up the grammar and punctuation after they have first produced the ideas," he explained.

"The hardest part," Judy said, "is to get them to say something. The ideas in the readings prompt them to respond with ideas from their own experience."

Although the number of institutions which have adopted the Rogers' book to date remain unknown to them--their publisher promises a report any day now--they are told the sales are good.

The couple claims no major collaborative problems arose during the writing of the book.

"Not at all," Glenn said. "In the beginning we worked on each chapter together. Later, as deadlines neared, we alternated chapters. She edited my chapters and I edited hers."

Rogers
4-4-4-4-4-4

This year, with the final deadline met and the book published, the Rogers adopted their second child, James.

"We got another baby," Judy laughed. "Now, I guess we should look for another book contract."

Dr. Ellis came to MSU in 1968 as director of libraries, a position he held until retiring in February. He earned the B.A. degree from Morehead State, the M.A. degree from George Peabody College and the Ed.D. degree from the University of Southern Mississippi. A former teacher and coach in the Rowan County schools, he also had been educational consultant to Coronet Films in Chicago and supervisor of instructional media for the Pinellas County (Fla.) schools. Listed in Who's Who in American Education, he was active in Gideons International Phi Delta Kappa and the American Library Association. He and his wife, the former Janis Caudill, are the parents of four children.

Watts, who joined the administrative staff in 1968, previously had been associate dean of labor at Berea College and a teacher in Breathitt County. In addition to his role as employee benefits manager, he was an assistant professor of marketing and management. Watts, who retired in January, was active in the College and University Personnel Association on the state and national levels. He earned his B.S. degree from Berea and a master's degree from Eastern Kentucky. He and his wife, Patricia, are the parents of two sons.

Cafeteria workers Brown and Flanery, who retired in April and June respectively, had 20 years of service each, while Hood, who retired in July, had 19. While only a full-time employee for the past year, Black had worked in food services since the mid-1970s.

After 18 years in the Registrar's Office, Tolliver retired in August. She joined the staff as a records clerk in 1967.

Burns, who also is an assistant professor of business, came to MSU in 1973 and has been director and associate director of University Business Services. His retirement is effective Dec. 31. A former superintendent at Scott County and Williamstown Independent schools, he was also principal at Catlettsburg High School. He earned the bachelor and master's degrees from MSU. He and his wife, the former Margaret Reynolds, are the parents of a son.

MOREHEAD, Ky.--Bonnie M. McNeely has been named coordinator for library automation at Morehead State University's Camden-Carroll Library.

"She will be responsible for the library automation system which uses computer-based technologies," said Larry Besant, director of MSU's libraries and instructional media. "The system makes it easier to use our library and gives our users access to other libraries and information files," he added.

McNeely, formerly MSU's librarian for the Eastern Kentucky Health Science Network, came to the University in 1984 from Southeastern Oklahoma State University where she was a librarian.

McNeely earned her bachelor's degree in English and history from the University of Texas at Arlington and a master's degree in library science from North Texas State University. She is active in the Kentucky Library Association and the Bluegrass Medical Library Association. She also is chair-elect of the Kentucky Council of Health Science Librarians.

McNeely and her husband, David, an MSU assistant professor of biology, have a daughter, Camille.

SPECIAL TO THE ELLIOTT COUNTY NEWS

MOREHEAD, Ky.--Morehead State University is conducting a research project in the Elliott County area on current farming methods and practices.

The project is designed to help identify new opportunities for all area farmers and not to single out a particular farmer, according to Phil Kenkel, agri-business specialist at MSU's Appalachian Development Center. Kenkel and Dr. Ed Reeves, assistant professor of sociology, are directing the project.

"We are going to be asking individual farmers to help us by participating in a survey," said Kenkel. "There are no questions involving income or any other sensitive issues on the survey. It deals solely with farming practices," Kenkel said.

Interviews are being conducted locally by Bruce Botts of Christy Creek, retired Elliott County postman.

Dr. Reeves has done similar farming research overseas as well as in Kentucky.

"Eastern Kentucky has a unique set of resources and types of farming," said Dr. Reeves. "We feel that more in-depth information concerning the current methods of farming is needed and that this study eventually will help to identify new farming opportunities for Eastern Kentucky farmers." Kenkel added that this study is particularly timely in light of the uncertain tobacco situation.

2-2-2-2-2-2

"We feel that before we recommend new farm enterprises to tobacco farmers we need to fully understand their farming operation. A new farming enterprise that may work well for one farmer, may not be appropriate for other farmers with different land resources or labor available," Kenkel continued.

The study in Elliott County is the first step in an overall project which is scheduled to cover four Eastern Kentucky counties. The results of the Elliott County study as well as the other selected counties will be published in area newspapers, as soon as the surveys are analyzed.

Anyone with questions concerning the study may contact Kenkel at (606) 783-2077 or Dr. Reeves at (606) 783-2090.

SPECIAL TO THE DAILY INDEPENDENT THROUGH Jan. 3.

By KENN JOHNSON
MSU Staff Writer

MOREHEAD, Ky.--As Ken Hackett bends to drink from the faucet at the men's room sink his tailfeathers point upward and he drops his large beaked head on one of his size-30 feet.

Hackett is the Morehead State University Eagle mascot and the feathers, head and feet are part of the costume he is wearing for an MSU basketball game. Taking a brief break, he gulps mouthfuls of cool water to replace the five or so pounds of sweat he will lose before the night is finished.

Revitalized, he hoists the massive Eagle head over his own regular-size blond one and is transformed from an exhausted sophomore into an energized, strutting, 6-foot-5-inch Eagle. As he heads back to the MSU Academic-Athletic Center's basketball arena, he takes a practice leap in the air and shadowboxes with a passing equipment manager.

At courtside the Cincinnati native goes into his act. He swipes a soft drink from a wide-eyed child, pretends to chug it and then after an appropriate pause, explodes with an exaggerated, make-believe belch. The child shakes with the giggles and the child's mother clasps her hands together in glee.

"I make up things as I go," Hackett said. "It works better if I don't plan things too much."

But he does have a few sure-fire gags to rely on. One of the most popular is an invisible dog he walks on a visible leash. When the MSU pep band breaks into a rousing fight song, Hackett drops to one knee--Al Jolson style--to pantomime along.

"The older ladies and the little kids like me best," Hackett said. "Sometimes I'll dance in the aisle with one of the women or sit on their laps and get a kiss. The kids are always curious about which part of the head I see through."

Although this is his first year as the MSU Eagle, he has mascotting in his blood. For several summers he has honed his skills as a clown in the role of Scooby-Doo at Kings Island Amusement Park. This summer, he attended the National Cheerleader Camp at the University of Tennessee.

"There were about 50 mascots at the camp from places like Purdue, Louisville and Mississippi. They taught us how to fall and tumble and exaggerate every movement. They'd turn on a videotape camera, hand us a leaf or something and tell us to create a routine on the spot," he said.

The camp's instructors stressed to the participants that a professional mascot never lets the audience see what he looks like.

"We're not supposed to remove our heads unless we are bleeding to death or something like that," Hackett explained.

A member of the MSU swim team and a well-built 6-foot-2-inch all-around athlete in high school, Hackett said that keeping in top physical shape is imperative for his position as the Eagle.

"The large, floppy feet are a problem too because you have to learn to use different muscles to walk," he said.

Hackett's biggest fans are his family.

"Dad was a little skeptical at first since he had been a major swimming star in college and felt a little funny about his son running around in a mascot suit," Hackett said. "But after they came down during football season and saw me, Dad said he thought I was very good and he was very proud of me."

MOREHEAD, Ky.--The best blue grass fiddler in the nation may be a Morehead State University sophomore.

Dan Kelly of Connellsville, Pa., recently won the 1985 National Fiddlers Championship in Mountainview, Ark. The contest is sponsored by the Society for the Preservation of Blue Grass Music Association.

Kelly, age 20, began playing the fiddle 10 years ago and has placed second in the national contest three times.

"I am very pleased to finally win first place," he said. "It is a great honor," Kelly added. The award includes $1,000.

According to Leo Blair, MSU assistant professor of music, Kelly's talent is a great contribution to the tradition of blue grass and folk fiddling.

"A lot of credit needs to be given young champions like Danny Kelly who continue to excel and pass this unique art on to future generations," Blair said.

Kelly has won several other championships including the 1985 Pennsylvania State Championship, the 1982-83 Mid-America Championship and the 1983 Grandmasters Championship in Nashville which won him an appearance on the famed "Grand Ole Opry."

He has recorded two albums, "Grandmasters Fiddle Champion" and "Pennsylvania State Fiddle Champion."

Kelly's parents are Kenneth and Gloria Kelly. He is a music major and hopes to teach high school after graduation.

MOREHEAD, Ky.--"Take change as a friend."

That was the advice Morehead State University Board of Regents Chairman Robert M. Duncan gave the University's winter graduates Saturday, Dec. 14.

Nearly 1,000 people attended the commencement ceremony held in Button Auditorium during which approximately 300 undergraduate and graduate degrees were conferred by MSU President Herb. F. Reinhard Jr.

With the approach of the 21st Century, Kentucky and America are at a critical point in history, said Duncan, a Board member since 1981.

"Technological progress and a rapidly changing economic and social order are profoundly affecting the foundations of our society," the Inez businessman said. "It is my belief that those of you who take change as a friend, those who embrace uncertainty will prosper in the new society," he added.

Duncan noted the shift from a national to international economy and said, "We must broaden our horizons to see the world as an economic unit as opposed to just Kentucky." He cited the new Toyota plant in Georgetown as a signal that Kentucky is positioned to prosper in the 21st Century, saying that it is "obvious that Governor Collins and her administration have embraced change and recognized the opportunity for Kentucky."

Despite chilly temperatures and threats of snow the night before, Button Auditorium at Morehead State University was packed Saturday (Dec. 14) for the University's Winter Commencement program. Degrees were conferred on more than 300 graduate and undergraduate students who completed their degree work during the semester. Speakers included MSU Board of Regents Chairman Robert M. Duncan, MSU President Herb. F. Reinhard Jr., and graduating senior Sigmund Bachmann of Switzerland.

Cutlines:

- 1--Dr. Gary C. Cox, professor of geography and grand marshal for MSU's Winter Commencement, pauses momentarily before leading the solemn academic procession into Button Auditorium.
- 2--Advising the graduates to look at change as a friend, MSU Board of Regents Chairman Robert M. Duncan of Inez also challenged them to expand their horizons to view the world as an economic unit as opposed to just Kentucky.
- 3--Praising the University's individualized approach with its students, Sigmund Bachmann, the student speaker, told the audience that he never had an opportunity to regret selecting MSU for his studies. A native of Switzerland, Bachmann earned the B.S. degree in agricultural science summa cum laude.
- 4--MSU President Herb. F. Reinhard personally extended congratulations to each degree recipient. Enjoying his very special moment with the University's chief executive officer is Sean Kelly of West Babylon, N.Y., who received the M.A. degree in communications.
- 5--Despite the chilly temperatures, there was an abundance of warmth in the air as graduates prepared to celebrate the milestone in their life with friends and family.

Duncan described MSU's student commencement speaker, Sigmund Bachmann, as "another example of the impact that a global economy can have on Kentucky." Bachmann, who received his B.S. degree in agricultural science summa cum laude during the ceremony, came to Morehead State from Switzerland.

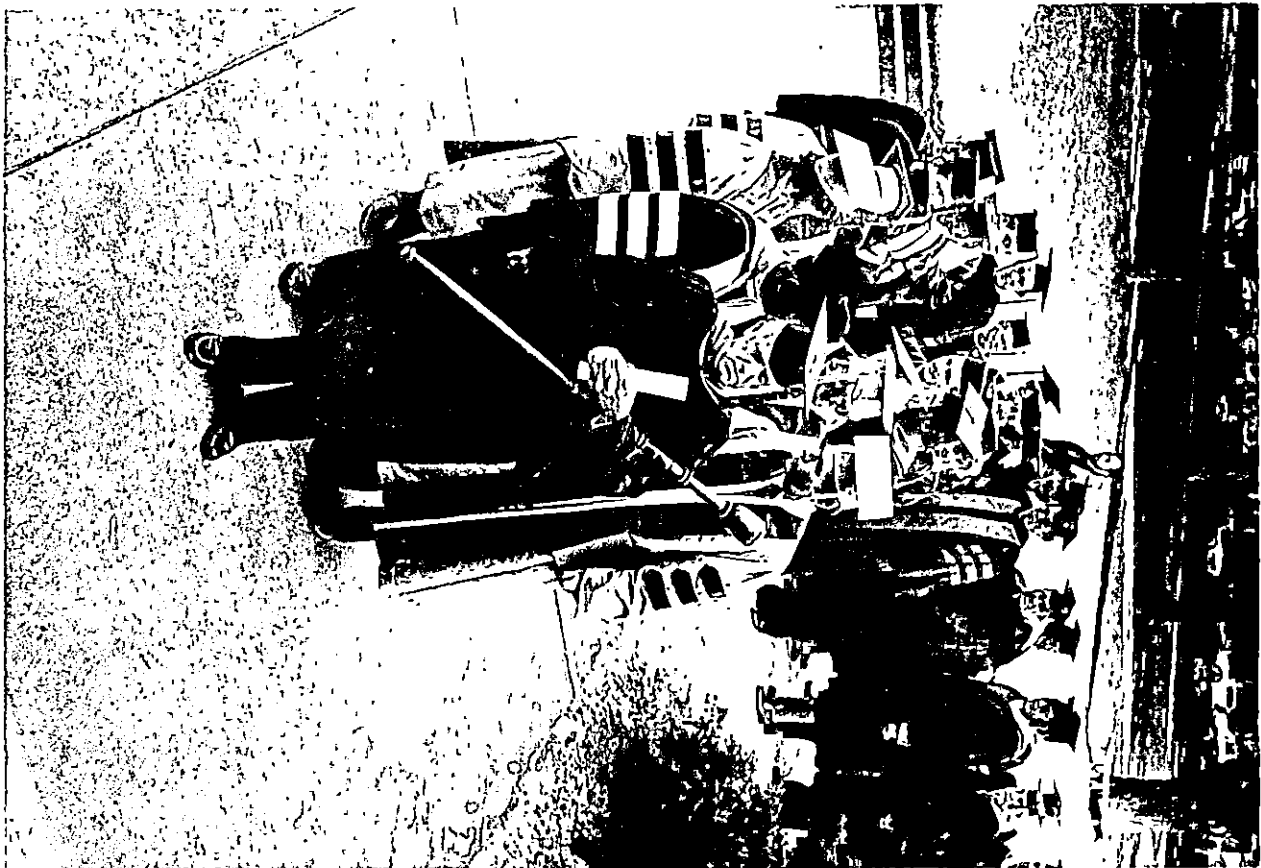

Duncan is president of the Inez Deposit Bank, the First National Bank of Louisa and the Kentucky Bankers Association. He also serves on the boards of Alice Lloyd College and Highlands Regional Medical Center. He is a member of the Kentucky Tomorrow Commission.

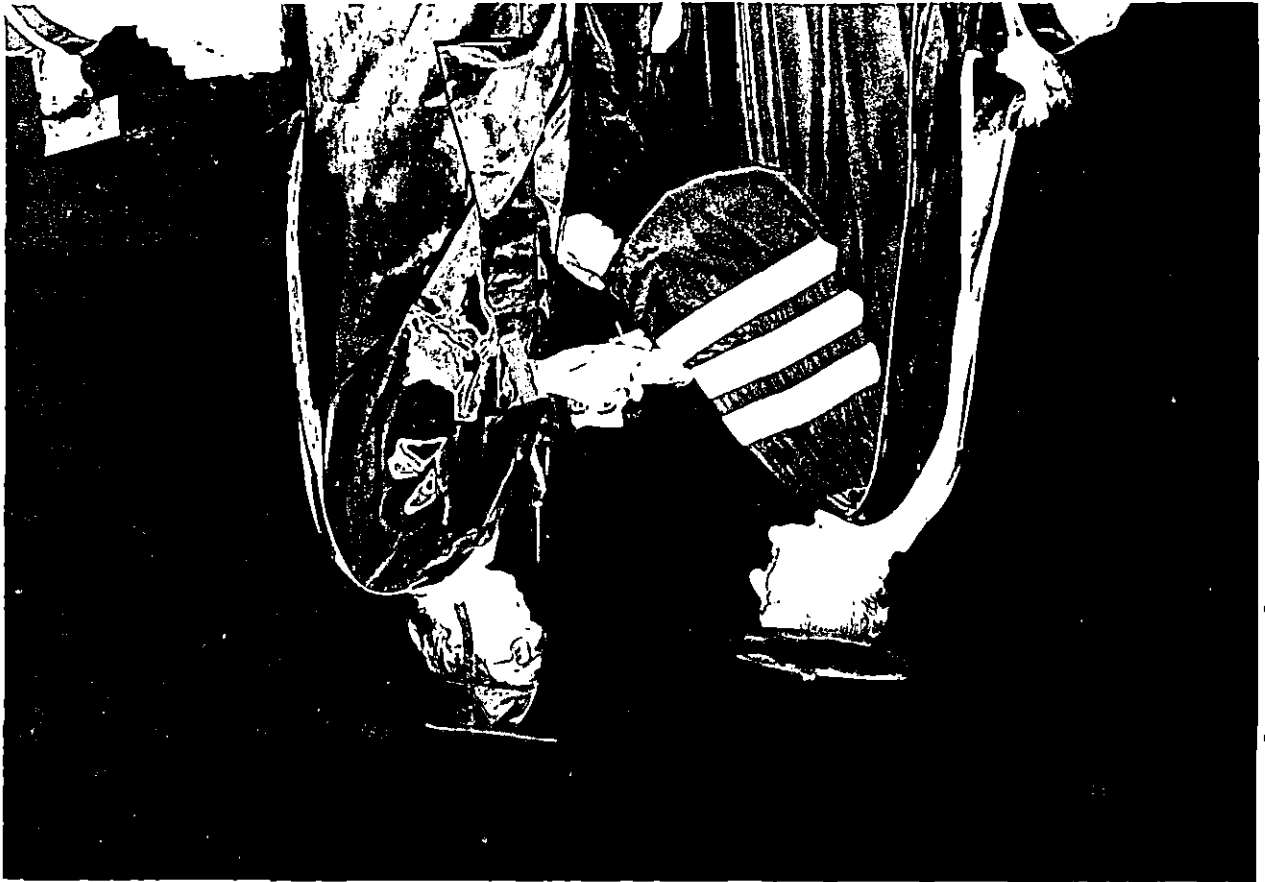

Wishing them a life of happiness and security, MSU President Reinhard told the graduates that he hoped "you will be able to look in the mirror and know that your workplace, your community, your world and your alma mater are better for your being here."

MOREHEAD, Ky.--When Frank C. Burns retires Dec. 31 as property accounting officer at Morehead State University, it will be with a great sense of pride in his 12-year-association with the University.

"I am really proud to have been associated with Morehead State, because I truly believe this institution has provided tremendous services to Eastern Kentucky since the school opened," Burns said.

Joining the University's staff in 1973 as associate director of institutional services, Burns was director of University Breckinridge School from 1975-80.

That period at Breck stands out in his mind because, Burns said, "it was by far the best school in the state. Our standard achievement scores were the best in the state for many, many years in a row."

Recalling his time in institutional services, Burns had praise for Dr. Adron Doran, MSU's president emeritus, who "involved us in a very exciting concept." Faculty members were sent out in teams to the region's high schools each week, according to Burns. "Not only did we offer services to those schools but the good will for the University that was generated back was invaluable," he said.

Burns spent his early childhood in Catlettsburg, moving to Morehead later and graduating from high school here. After serving two years in the Pacific during World War II, he returned to MSU to earn a bachelor of arts degree in 1949. He received his master's degree from MSU in 1955.

Executive head of the Hammersville, Ohio, schools in 1955-56, Burns returned to Catlettsburg as principal of the high school from 1957 to 1962.

"That was an odd sensation, returning to my hometown, because you can't fool the people you grew up with," he laughed. "They knew I was no genius, but I really loved the job--especially the year we finally beat Ashland in football 26-3."

Burns said he often called on Morehead State for aid and advice when he was superintendent of the Williamstown City Schools (1962-65) and of the Scott County School System (1965-73). "I always received great support from the University," he said.

Retirement for Burns doesn't mean he will quit working. "I have already arranged for some educational consulting work and my wife says she has lots of plans for me. I'm just going to take a deep breath and then get started on something else," he said.

Burns and his wife, the former Margaret Reynolds of Morehead, have a son, Robert who also is an MSU alumnus.

MOREHEAD, Ky.--Charles E. Mason, Morehead State University assistant professor of geoscience, has been named recipient of the University's H.W. Straley III Outstanding Geoscience Alumnus Award for 1985-86.

Given annually to alumni who have excelled in their field, the award is named for a former professor of geoscience who retired in 1969, according to Dr. John C. Philley, MSU Department of Physical Sciences chair.

A native of Lewis County, Mason earned his B.S. degree from MSU and the M.S. degree from George Washington University, Washington, D.C. Prior to joining the faculty in 1982, he was employed at the U.S. National Museum in Washington, D.C., by the U.S. Geological Survey.

"Professor Mason's interests and extensive research in palentology has given him international stature as an expert on carboniferous ammonoids," said Dr. Philley. "His alma mater is pleased to honor him," he added.

Mason also is the author of several professional papers, maps and geologic guidebooks.
