I have been trying for two or three days to collect my ideas, in order that I may write you a description of all laws seen and heard, since my last letter to you from Harrodsburg. I was at Frankfor who flon. Taylor arrived, and the scene which followed was no profiely "assonishing, beyond astronishment" (1) that I have deliberated whethreen and language can give were ment"(:) that I have deliberated wheth-er pen and language can give you any idea of it. The cannonading commenc-ed two days before the General ared two days before the General ar-rived. All the bugles, tamborines, bass dyuns, fiddles, flutes, fifes, tin-pans, bells, darioetes, trumpers, whistles, me pws-harps, that could be raised in the Stats were put into lively motion. These festivities were kept up without intermis-sic till the Sea Gull, conveying the re-mains of the President elect, hove in sight, I call it remains, Mr. Editor, because there is but little of the old General left, and if the general array of the till the search of the good of the general search of the search of the search of the good of the general search of the sea and if the gens d'armes d'Elite, do not watch him with more care, there will be but a fragment when he gets to Washing-

I have often heard of the breaking losse of bedlam, but I never witnessed it, or anything like it, before. I thought I had heard noise in my life, as I have visor anything lage in perions. I throught in his deard noise in my life, as I have visited the Falls of Niagara. I was in Rome conce, during the Carsival. I was a cojourner in Europein 1830, and heard the roar of the great mortars and cannons, at the siege of. Antwerp. I was at Najes in five multies of Mt. Vesuvius—and heard the rumbling and tumbling of the mountain, but the deafening sound of the cataroct, the eternal buzz of the Carnival, the multies the boisterous, gloomy rumble of Mt. Vesuvius, could compare with his novel sight and roaring spectiacle, witnessed by people from all portions of the Usion, who focked to behold a whig President! Novel sight indeed! After the boat landed the General was conveyed on shore in a Falenspain, made of man od on shore in a Palanquin, made of ma-hogany and cushioned with elegant silk velvet, canopied with rich silk, upon which was embroidered the names and favorite motios of all prominent men of the whig party; also the initials of the names of the respective party, also the initials of the names of the respective offices each expect to get.—
A grand pavilion was erceed, upon the wherf, upon which was placed a cheir of State. The fingtones here reposed upon its short time, wiring with surpise, the standards, streamers, flags, banners and heraldry, of the State, with which the pavilion was bung, all belonging to the whig party of Kentucky. The General was conveyed to this honorable seat, by 12 members of the Senate, and 12 House, all marching to the air of look at the manufact of the control of t 12 House, all marching to the air of "Look at the man with all your eyes.—Welcome mighty chief, and the March on Montercy!" The cannons opened the welcome mighty chief, and the March on Montercy!* The cannon opened their fire again, until you would have thought the hills, the "everlassing hills" around Prankfort were going to tumble down, and overwhelm the little city, President and all. The General arose after the tu-mult subsided a little, and made a hand-come address to all who would thus him some address to all who could hear him 'Tis said he resembled one of Milton'

jestis."

He was next placed in a splendid carriage, drawn by six white horses, and driven by one of the Coptains, who fought at Buena Vista. I forget his name, but its the same one who declard he was not the least confused when the battle not the least confused when the battle commenced; and an a proof of his self-posscasion, he says, he shouldered his ryfe-hot gun, and planted himself behind a white ook hickory sepling, and fired away with his pistol masket and she snapped. (greatly to his piyo) for he went to a low bush, to see if he had killed a Mexican, and found a fernale woman, frightened to ceath, though life was visible.

The procession was then formed in the following order:
