THRONGS GO TO KENTUCKY SUNDAY

Sunday was an ideal autumn day and people generally took advantage of the fine weather by taking sight seeing strolls or drives into the rural districts.

The Kentucky hills were a mecca for hundreds who climbed to the tops to get a good view of the city and surrounding country. Others walked along the river shore up to see the famed Indian Rock now visible owing to the low stage of the river. The Ohio itself was dotted with gasoline launches and other small craft throughout the day. Scores of sight seers saw the new flood wall for the first time Sunday.
