

A Well Deserved Honor

In the opinion of the Pineville Sun the reward given Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart by the Pictorial Review was well deserved and reflects credit not only on Mrs. Stewart but on the judges who made the selection. The Sun says:

"The selection of Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, of Morehead, as the winner of the $5,000 award given by the Pictorial Review for the woman who has made the greatest contribution to civilization during the year is an honor not only to the recipient of the prize but to Kentucky where Mrs. Stewart has devoted the greater part of her life to the task of eradicating adult illiteracy in Kentucky and elsewhere, and she long has been recognized as one of the leading women of America.

"Beginning her work against adult illiteracy on a modest scale in Rowan county, Mrs. Stewart carried her message to other parts of the state, then to other states and now she is the recognized leader in the work in the world. Her pleas for the eradication of illiteracy have been heard in every corner of the earth and the theories worked out in the 'moonlight schools' of Rowan county now are being practiced successfully throughout the world.

"The Pictorial Review showed good judgment in selecting the outstanding woman of the world today. Kentuckians should be proud of Mrs. Stewart and glory in the honor she has brought to her native state."
