

A WOMAN'S WORK IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, of Morehead, Ky., who is the Superintendent of Public Schools for Rowan county, is one of the most active and efficient of the school superintendents of the State. Wherever women occupy that position they seem to give their whole heart to their work and produce the most beneficial results. But among them all, none has succeeded in making a deeper impression or doing more valuable service. She has not confined her efforts to her own county, but has extended her influence and activities to many of the other mountain counties where she has become widely known both through her school work and through her interest in advancing the general welfare of all classes with whom she is thrown. The influence for good of such a woman is far greater than can be estimated by a rank outsider. She wants all possible assistance from people everywhere, but her knowledge of the people among whom she works, their confidence in her and the absence of restraint upon her approach all give her opportunities to reach the people with a degree of intimacy that is impossible to others. She is in perfect sympathy and accord with all other workers on the same line, but she has discovered that the best work can be done by those whom the people feel to be one of themselves. Among other sources of benefit which she has found to be particularly valua-
