THE ROWAN COUNTY WAR

TWO Factions thirsting for each other's blood. An old feud which has cost the lives of several of the prominent citizens of Rowan County for the past 7 years. Philadelphia, July 5. The Kentucky troops who participated in the recent engagement were their order to march to their homes when they got home. They believe they will be avenged of the Rowan County War. The South is now in a state of consternation, and the town is under constant fear of the Kentuckians. The Rowan County War is the result of the feud between the families of the late John and Mary Underwood, who were killed in a duel. Martin Underwood and James Underwood, the latter brother of the late John Underwood, the former brother of the late Mary Underwood, are the chief instigators of the Rowan County War. The feud started over a dispute between the two families, and became general. The war has been in progress for about seven months, and has cost the lives of several of the prominent citizens of Rowan County.

The North is in a state of consternation, and the town is under constant fear of the Kentuckians. The Rowan County War is the result of the feud between the families of the late John and Mary Underwood, who were killed in a duel. Martin Underwood and James Underwood, the latter brother of the late John Underwood, the former brother of the late Mary Underwood, are the chief instigators of the Rowan County War. The feud started over a dispute between the two families, and became general. The war has been in progress for about seven months, and has cost the lives of several of the prominent citizens of Rowan County.

The North is in a state of consternation, and the town is under constant fear of the Kentuckians. The Rowan County War is the result of the feud between the families of the late John and Mary Underwood, who were killed in a duel. Martin Underwood and James Underwood, the latter brother of the late John Underwood, the former brother of the late Mary Underwood, are the chief instigators of the Rowan County War. The feud started over a dispute between the two families, and became general. The war has been in progress for about seven months, and has cost the lives of several of the prominent citizens of Rowan County.

The North is in a state of consternation, and the town is under constant fear of the Kentuckians. The Rowan County War is the result of the feud between the families of the late John and Mary Underwood, who were killed in a duel. Martin Underwood and James Underwood, the latter brother of the late John Underwood, the former brother of the late Mary Underwood, are the chief instigators of the Rowan County War. The feud started over a dispute between the two families, and became general. The war has been in progress for about seven months, and has cost the lives of several of the prominent citizens of Rowan County.

The North is in a state of consternation, and the town is under constant fear of the Kentuckians. The Rowan County War is the result of the feud between the families of the late John and Mary Underwood, who were killed in a duel. Martin Underwood and James Underwood, the latter brother of the late John Underwood, the former brother of the late Mary Underwood, are the chief instigators of the Rowan County War. The feud started over a dispute between the two families, and became general. The war has been in progress for about seven months, and has cost the lives of several of the prominent citizens of Rowan County.

The North is in a state of consternation, and the town is under constant fear of the Kentuckians. The Rowan County War is the result of the feud between the families of the late John and Mary Underwood, who were killed in a duel. Martin Underwood and James Underwood, the latter brother of the late John Underwood, the former brother of the late Mary Underwood, are the chief instigators of the Rowan County War. The feud started over a dispute between the two families, and became general. The war has been in progress for about seven months, and has cost the lives of several of the prominent citizens of Rowan County.

The North is in a state of consternation, and the town is under constant fear of the Kentuckians. The Rowan County War is the result of the feud between the families of the late John and Mary Underwood, who were killed in a duel. Martin Underwood and James Underwood, the latter brother of the late John Underwood, the former brother of the late Mary Underwood, are the chief instigators of the Rowan County War. The feud started over a dispute between the two families, and became general. The war has been in progress for about seven months, and has cost the lives of several of the prominent citizens of Rowan County.

The North is in a state of consternation, and the town is under constant fear of the Kentuckians. The Rowan County War is the result of the feud between the families of the late John and Mary Underwood, who were killed in a duel. Martin Underwood and James Underwood, the latter brother of the late John Underwood, the former brother of the late Mary Underwood, are the chief instigators of the Rowan County War. The feud started over a dispute between the two families, and became general. The war has been in progress for about seven months, and has cost the lives of several of the prominent citizens of Rowan County.

The North is in a state of consternation, and the town is under constant fear of the Kentuckians. The Rowan County War is the result of the feud between the families of the late John and Mary Underwood, who were killed in a duel. Martin Underwood and James Underwood, the latter brother of the late John Underwood, the former brother of the late Mary Underwood, are the chief instigators of the Rowan County War. The feud started over a dispute between the two families, and became general. The war has been in progress for about seven months, and has cost the lives of several of the prominent citizens of Rowan County.