A CLOCK DURING A THUNDERSTORM

There is one thing that Robert Louis Stevenson wrote that has stood out in my memory above all others. It is this: "Quiet minds can not be preoccupied or frightened, but go on in misfortune at their own private pace, like a clock during a thunderstorm."

Lincoln holding his course during the trying days of the Civil war Washington at Valley Forge; Elbert and Alice Hubbard calmly facing death on the Lusitania; Nathan Hale; Christ before the mob—quiet minds all.

The man who can say, with Walt Whitman, "Nothing external to me can have any power over me," the man who knows that, as the stoic philosopher Seneca said, "Most powerful is he who has himself in his power," that type of man has a quiet mind. He moves forward as tranquilly as a chip on a placid stream. He plows ahead like a steamer, rough or smooth, rain or shine.

Is there any finer illustration of perfect poise than a clock during a thunderstorm?

MIND OUR OWN BUSINESS

Experienced observers of the international scene are now predicting there will not be a general European war this year. Few of them go so far as to say there may not be one next year. With two gigantic military machines, Germany's and Italy's, and Mussolini openly boasting that he has the most powerful fleet of military airplanes in the world, the largest number of submarines, and can mobilize an army of nine million soldiers over night, the threat to peace implied by Hitler's annexation of Austria and his apparent intentions toward other nations seems menacing indeed.

It may be objected that all of this is none of our business and doesn't concern America. But it does concern America, in many ways. It is not inevitable that this country will be drawn into the next European war, if we watch our step and do not commit ourselves to fight other people's battles. But there is no doubt that some of the free nations of Europe are counting upon American support should they become involved.

It seems clear that if the democracies of the world, which include besides America, the British Empire, France, Denmark, Belgium, the Netherlands, Switzerland, Norway, Sweden and Finland, form an alliance for the protection of the democratic principle, the autocrats of the world would at once make common cause against them, and we would have the spectacle of a world at war over conflicting ideals.

The sane attitude for the United States to take is to strengthen our defenses, rigorously maintain our independence and maintain friendly relations with all other nations, whatever their forms of government. It is none of our business if a nation chooses to be Fascist, Communist or anything else so long as they don't try to force their system on us.

The defeat of the President's Government Reorganization bill by the House of Representatives, after the Senate had passed it by a narrow margin, is regarded here as evidence that Congress has reasserted its independence and resumed its status as an equal and co-equal branch of the government.

The action of the House, in re-overruling the most severe blow to the President's prestige which Mr. Roosevelt has yet received. Last year the Senate refused to grant him power to reorganize the Supreme Court. The lower House was regarded as more amenable to the wishes of the White House, especially this year when every member comes up for re-election.

Defeat of the Reorganization bill is merely one indication of the growing revolt of Congress against Executive control. The action of the Senate in eliminating reform characters as well as all from the current tax bill all of the other items on which the President and his advisors had set much store. What's more, several amendments were drafted to relieve business of certain tax burdens, and were certainly not contemplated by the original framers.

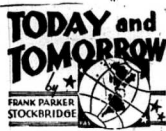

In both the above cases, the split between Congress and the Administration has been squarely one of policy. This is taken by many to indicate that Congress has grown out of sympathy. Another view, however, is that the earlier avowed aims of the New Deal and it is determined to stop further encroachments by the Executive in its legislative domains of power.

330,000 Wire "No"
The belief that the Reorganization bill was but part of a scheme to concentrate more power into the Executive's hands shared by many members of both Houses. It certainly was shared by many people who deluged the bill with telegraph companies with 330,000 wires, not to mention uncounted letters, almost universally disapproving of the proposed bill. Many of these letters were signed by an eleven-hour and straggly unassociated denial of dictatorial line with this, authority for broad lending powers by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has already been granted and the Reconstruction Administration has been re clothed with authority to make loans to states, municipalities and other public bodies for a variety of projects.

The experience of the R. F. C. with its loans so far has been good. Since that Federal agency was established by President Hoover in 1913 it has lent nine and one-half billion dollars to a vast number of enterprises most of which money has been repaid or is in the process of repayment with sound security behind the loans.

Record of W. P. A.
The W. P. A.'s experience with non-interest-bearing loans to public agencies is not long enough to base judgement upon as to repayment records. Most of the PWA loans are for very long terms, some as long as sixty years, many of them to be repaid out of local taxes which are subject to political manipulation. P. W. A. loans on self-liquidating projects such as toll bridges are regarded as good.

CANALS

The Federal Government is proposing to buy the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal and turn it into a public recreation waterway. I can vouch for the recreation possibilities for my adolescent youth in Washington the old "C. & O." canal was one of the favorite playgrounds of boys in their middle "teens" whom I used to go with.

Originally planned by George Washington to provide a waterway between the navigable lower waters of the Potomac and the upper reaches of that turbulent river, the C. & O. canal was not finished until 1828 and the canal had begun to replace waterways for inland transport. But it carried a good deal of slow-moving freight for 75 years and it was a grand place to swim and fish and paddle a canoe.

I remember the winter of 1888-89 when the Potomac River froze solid at Washington and the canal provided wonderful skating. The other boys and myself started to skate from Washington to Cumberland 120 miles. There is no more beautiful scenery in America than the wooded mountains through which the Potomac falls and up which the C. & O. canal climbs by a series of locks.

ERIE
"Clinton's Folly"
Another waterway which I knew well as a young man is the Erie Canal, which runs 300 miles across New York from Lake Erie to the Hudson River. The Erie Canal was the chief canal in the world and far seeing American patriot, DeWitt Clinton. Clinton was first to realize, after the Revolution, that the North and South were bound to fall up with settlers, whose products would have to be shipped to the seaboard. Railroads had not been invented. The only water route to the sea were the Ohio and Mississippi valleys, leading to New Orleans, and the Great Lakes, blocked by Niagara Falls. And even if commerce could get by the Falls it would go through Canada and the ice-bound St. Lawrence River.

"Clinton's Folly" as his political enemies ridiculed his canal scheme, made New York City the metropolis of America, for it concentrated all of the freight originating in the basin of the Great Lakes at Buffalo and carried it by water to the Hudson River and the seaport at its mouth. Philadelphia was America's largest city in 1825, when the Erie Canal was opened, and Boston second.

CHLARE
More fatal automobile accidents are caused by glaring headlights than by almost any other single cause. Every driver frequently wishes there were some way to kill the glare. Such a way has been found, and a company has been formed to manufacture a new material which when used in headlight lenses and applied to windshield, reducing the glare of an approaching car's lights to a couple of bright purple spots while still permitting them to illuminate the roadway.

It will probably be years before this new anti-glare system comes into general use, just as it took years after the invention of shatter proof glass before car manufacturers generally adopted it. Now many states refuse to license a car which is not equipped with safety glass, and I anticipate that in time every car will be required to have anti-glare headlights and windshields.

Some day, beyond doubt, driving on the highways will be a much safer occupation than it is today. Automobiles have already killed more people in 40 years than were killed in all of the wars this nation has been engaged in.

High Minimum Wage
The minimum wage rates prescribed for women retail clerks in the District of Columbia and Utah are the highest so far established outside of Nevada. Nevada has a $1 weekly minimum, and the District of Columbia $17.

Kansas Landmarks
The Women's Professional Division of WPA has recognized the unusual art of Miss Margaret Whitmore of Topeka, Kansas, by commissioning her to make prints of her state's landmarks and birds for museum service which is being established in the Sunflower State. For some time this unique artist has been keeping a sketchbook in which she has made a graphic history of the state's growth by picturing its peculiar rock formations, old bridges, buildings and trees. She began her career as an artist at the Chicago Art Institute and received first prize in an American block print exhibit. She contributes to many of our leading magazines and illustrated books on trees and birds.

Woman Suffrage in Bulgaria
Bulgarian women have had their suffrage extended by King Boris. Instead of only mothers being permitted to vote, all women, including widows and divorcees over 21 may vote in the parliamentary elections.

5-Minute Biographies

Author of "How to Win Friends and Influence People."

The "Perfect Lover" Who Chewed Tobacco, Bit His Fingernails, and Drank Wine Out Of Human Skulls

LORD BYRON

A hundred years ago there was no man in the world who could compete, so far as the ladies were concerned, with the romantic George Gordon, Lord Byron.

He was the greatest poet of his day. His influence changed the whole trend of literature in the nineteenth century. He wrote some of the greatest romantic verse to be found in our anthologies, and some of the tenderest. He loved dozens of women, but stranger of all, he loved his own half-sister and the scandal of their love shocked Europe and ruined her life. After they were driven apart, he wrote to her one of the loveliest poems:

If I should meet thee
After long years
How should I greet thee?
With silence and tears

What was he like, this great paragon of lovers, this Valentine of the century ago? He had a deformed foot. He limped badly. He chewed his fingernails. He chewed tobacco. He swashbuckled about in the broad daylight of 19th century

Britain bristling with loaded pistols like a Chicago gangster. His temper was vicious. If people stared at him, his blood pressure rose twenty points, for he imagined they were staring at his deformed foot. This poet who was hailed as the perfect Romeo, loved to torture women. Two hours after the marriage ceremony, he informed his bride that he hated her, that he had married her only out of spite and that she would live to rue the day she first saw him. She did.

The country people who lived near his great Abby told strange yarns. They said that all his servants were young girls—beautiful girls, girls with amiable dispositions. The country folks told how he and his guests dressed up as monks in long black cassocks and indulged in orgies that would have made Belshazzor's dinner parties sound like a W. C. T. U. breakfast. Ambler servant girls served the wine, and Byron and his friends drank it—not out of glasses or goblets—but out of human skulls —scrapped and polished until they shone like a full moon in the desert. Byron, slender and graceful, was often compared to the Apollo Belvedere. His skin was so white that adoring females declared he looked like a beautiful alabaster vase lighted up from within." But they didn't realize what agonies he went through to look like that. They didn't know that every day of his life, and every hour, was a constant, irritating, and exhausting battle against "fat." In order to remain slender and lovable, he endured a diet so fantastic that it has never hit even Hollywood.

This fantastic dieting ruined his digestion; and, as a result, his bed room reeked of pills and potions and patent medicines.

He suffered so horribly from nightmares that he resorted to laudanum. But even laudanum couldn't stifle his bad dreams, so he kept two loaded pistols beside his bed. In the quiet of the night he would wake up yelling and gnashing his teeth, and would stride up and down the room brandishing pistols and daggers.

He had another superstition that haunted him. A gypsy fortune-teller once warned him that he would die in his thirty-seventh year. He died three months after he had passed his thirty-sixth birthday. Byron believed a sinister curse doomed all his family. The thirty-sixth birthday, he swore, was fatal to the people of his blood. Some modern biographers are even inclined to agree with him; for Byron's father died at the age of thirty-six, and Byron's daughter, whose life was exactly like her father's also died on the eve of her

At Cozy Sunday

The close-up reveals Hollywood's technical skill at its best. "It takes each pair trained to do a specialized job," says George Foley, ace cameraman. "This is the most interesting of all shots, demanding detailed perfection of lighting and setting. It is often simpler to film a mob scene of a thousand people than a close-up of one face."

"Watch this next set-up as an example of how we work," he suggested.

The camera was being moved in to take a close-up of Joan Crawford in a scene for "Mannequin," which will show at the Cozy Theatre Sunday and Monday. She was wearing a white evening gown, and stood on a moonlit terrace, partly obscured by tree shadows.

"In the long shot," Foley pointed out, "we established the moonlight effect and tree shadows. Our object is to reproduce nature realistically on the screen. The moonlight and shadows must fall on Miss Crawford as they would normally." The gaffer, who bosses the electricians, stands on a small ladder and handles the dimmer on the key object is to reproduce nature realistically on the screen. The moonlight and shadows must fall on Miss Crawford as they would normally. "The gaffer, who bosses the electricians, stands on a small ladder and handles the dimmer on the key object is to reproduce nature realistically on the screen. sunlight. With Hamilton is Sasso, known in film slang as the "Best Boy." He adjusts the key light on signal from Foley.

Beneath the light stands one of several grips. He is the handy man. At the moment, Tommy is arranging the branches of a tree so that the shadows will fall naturally across Miss Crawford's white gown.

Miss Crawford looks to see that she is at the exact position she should be. The spot where she must stand to be in focus has been marked earlier with a piece of tape. "Camera," says Borzage. When the camera stops spinning, Foley smiles. "That," he says, "is all there is to a close-up."

Charged With Starting Fires

Three men have appeared recently in the county courts before U. S. Commissioner Riley on the Red River District of the Cumberland National Forest charged with setting brush fires to escape, and either threatened or burn Government land.

Elmer Duff of Ryan, Ky., in Lewis County, pleaded guilty before U. S. Commissioner Riley of Morehead, Ky., to the charge of abandoning a fire which on March 21 threatened Government land. Duff was held for $500 bond and taken to the Catlettsburg jail. Grimsey Rose pleaded guilty before County Judge Buchanan in the Menifee County Court to a charge of allowing a fire to escape, which damaged 5 acres of Government land on Beaver Creek of Licking River. The fire escaped from a pile of debris which Rose was burning. Defendant was fined $10 and costs.

Judge Bowen of the Powell County Court fined Sherwood Napier $10 and costs after Napier had pleaded guilty to allowing a fire to burn, which threatened Cumberland National Forest land. Napier's sentence was suspended, and he was released on good behavior.

Laughing Around the World With IRVIN S. COBB

Scandal Had No Appeal For Her By IRVIN S. COBB

THE recent death of the great Kentucky writer, James Lane Allen, revived in my mind a story which concerned about a title of perhaps his most famous novel.

that she wanted a book for entertainment on a train journey—preferably fiction. "Well," he said, picking up a volume, "there is one which is very popular at present—'The Kentucky Cardinal'."

"I do not believe I'd care to read about a religious dignitary," she said.

"But Madam," explained the dealer, "this Kentucky cardinal was a bird."

"His private life means nothing to me," she answered, with a deep chill in her voice. "If you have no classic works that you can recommend, I'll go elsewhere."

But Natalie knew what he came to say and perhaps Sunny knew as well. For nothing else could have sent him to them in such mad haste.

"Mont's safe," Natalie cried out. "Is that it, Jimmy?"

He nodded his head, gasping. And then the two seized him and pummeled him till he actually could not get the words out.

Just like Jimmy Mattern," he sobbed out presently. "He was down twelve days before he could get word out. Some little place in Siberia. The Russians flew over twice hunting for him but he couldn't make them see him."

Strength surged into Natalie like a miracle. Sunny forgot herself and danced so madly that they thought she would hurt herself from the rock in her ecstasy.

Then they were all three running for Jimmy's car and Jimmy drove them straight to the flying field.

There the news was pouring in. Mont himself stood at the elbow of one of those short-wave operators on the other side of the world. He had fought his way through the wilderness, sometimes afoot, sometimes in a peasant's wagon, at last in a puffing train with no one aboard who could speak a word of English.

He had reached the Siberian control and had flashed the story of his safety. He was there now letting the world know and Natalie, peering together the bits that came from the humming receivers through the lips of one small radio operator, was writing the big account of her life.

Mack Hanlon was rushing out an extra at the other end of the telephone. Sunny had flashed him before he raced to tell Sunny. He had tried to call Natalie but could get no answer. Now he was venturing Natalie's story, line by line, to Hanlon.

Mont Wallace would complete his flight and try again to win his non-stop honors, the story read. Jabe Marion had issued orders that the flight organization was to remain intact for the second trial.

Natalie finished her story and made Jimmy take her to the office.

"I don't want any more vacation," she told Hanlon as the shouts of the newsboys announced the extra on the street. "I want to handle the yarn from now till the second flight is over."

Hanlon was like a pleased child. "What I ought to do," he laughed "is to send you along with this bird. These flights are harder on you than they are on him."

Natalie could laugh at that. There were few secrets between her and the weazened little city editor.

She went to find Jimmy in the photograph's den. He was slumped about in the dark-room with its eerie red light.

"Wait a minute," he yelled at her knock. Then he opened the door and she stood beside him under the red light while he worked.

"I thought you were supposed to be laid up," he chuckled as he rubbed the tips of his fingers over a weak spot in one of his negatives. "I guess there wasn't anything that matters with you that Dr. Mont Wallace couldn't cure."

"Gosh, Jimmy," the girl responded, "you don't suppose I'm crazy or anything do you? How can anybody be like that who is in her right mind?"

The boy grinned at her in that eerie glow.

"You and I ought to know, kid," he said, "that love makes plain insanity look foolish."

He went on with his work for a few minutes in silence. Then:

"How come you and Sunny Marion got so thick up there on that rock? I thought you hadn't been seeing much of each other?"

"Oh, that's just some more of the craziness. She's got it too, poor page open to him for another day, but after that there were more thrilling stories than his new pre-occupation with work, his hours spent on the plane and on the revision of the flight organization.

Natalie herself was writing a new series of features and found herself engrossed.

Life was returning to its old round. Even Mack Hanlon was little interested in the story of the new flight attempt.

But at last the day of the take-off came.

The plans had been changed now. The start was to be made from the home airport, New York. The only one of the refueling stops. The last leg of the flight would be down the coast from Nome.

Before dawn they were at the field. Jimmy was there with his flashlights going to record the new scene and the alternated plane.

And Sunny Marion was there. It was the first time Natalie had seen her in weeks. The change in her appearance shocked the older girl. It was not possible that this was the golden beauty of a few weeks before.

The plane had been trilled out to the runway. The clockers were in their own places. Grease-monkeys swarmed about. And because it was the first start of an inter-continental flight from the small port, there was a goodly crowd of curious onlookers.

Natalie moved through the crowd for a sight of Mont. At last she found him talking with Jabe Marion and the little radio operator. She joined the small party and stood at Mont's side.

"Good luck and success this time boy." She spoke in a low tone. "I've got a bet right on your nose."

It was then that Natalie's knees almost buckled under her. Jimmy and Sunny raced on and gathered him into their arms. Natalie came after with Jabe Marion.

To her amazement Sunny faced her with Mont, her arm about him and his thrown across her shoulder.

"Congratulations, people," she said. "Mont and I are going to be married."

Mont turned quickly and looked down into Sunny's face. Clearly he had not expected so early an announcement but he grinned when he looked up again and gripped Jabe Marion's hand as the elder man sprang forward.

Natalie was surprised at her own reaction. She thought she knew now what Sunny had meant by that speech of cheating. The girl, no doubt, had taken Mont's words as an offer of marriage on their night together. Mont had been caught in the trap of her apartment naive, she, too, had been caught. Nothing she could say or do would make a difference. Mont was helpless. And if what she suspected was true, there might be despair behind Sunny's haste.

Natalie caught Mont's hand in hers and clung to it. But her eyes avoided his face, fearing what they might find there. Maybe it was true. Maybe Mont had meant only that he could not marry Natalie. Maybe he had willingly been drawn into this engagement with Sunny Marion.

Such was her greeting. Such was Natalie's meeting with the man she loved after the agony of those weeks.

But the joy of seeing him, of having him near, kept her from being cast down. It was not till she was alone that night that she gave way to a torrent of tears.

They had gone to the Rensselaer Hotel in New York for the flight

"Swimming in Space" at 15 Miles an Hour!

In 1840, travel on the Louisa Railroad—which later became the Chesapeake and Ohio—demanded a high degree of courage. The reward, however, was great, for the train would whirl you along the metal-stripped wooden rails at fifteen miles an hour—a speed described by a journalist of the day as "swimming in space." But at what a contrast to today's railroad comfort!

THERE was no water in the cars. Two candle-lanterns per coach provided "light," but no heat of any sort was furnished. (Passengers could, however, purchase hot bricks from enterprising children along the road.) Sparks from the wood-burning engine often set fire to the coach awnings. But travelers were inspired by the example of a commanding personage—the Captain of the Crew, great-grand-daddy of today's conductor. In long frock coat and high plug hat, bravely he stood at the front of the first car!

Today that seems a feeble railroad, but it had the ambition of the giant it became. With track completed from Doswell to Gondoanville, Virginia, stockholders of the Louisa Railroad chose the Ohio River as their western terminus.

The railroad was a major factor in developing the territory it entered, helping settlements to become villages, towns and cities. Today the Chesapeake and Ohio dedicates its modern transportation facilities to the communities it serves, in reverent appreciation of the pioneers of railroading and civic progress.
