

"Yes. Several days later, the same man came again, and an even more sinister-looking individual was with him. I got only the merest glimpse of them as Kaspar led them into this room and closed the doors."

"I hardly think these two mysterious callers," Kroyer continued, commented with pompous finality, had any connection with Kaspar's kidnaping."

"Are you sure of that, Mr. Kenting?" Vance asked coldly.

"Oh, no—no, no," the other replied apologetically. "I can't be sure. I merely meant it isn't logical to suppose that two men would expose themselves so openly if they contemplated a step attended by such serious consequences as a proven kidnaping."

"It might be, of course, as you say," he remarked lightly. "Also it might not be—what? Interesting speculation. But quite futile. And now I think we might go above, to Mr. Kaspar Kenting's bedroom."

As we came out into the main hall, the door to a small room just opposite was standing ajar, and as I pushed through it I saw what appeared to be a miniature museum of some kind. There was a long case set against the walls, and a double row of larger cases down the center of the room.

"A collection of semi-precious stones," commented Vance. "Do you mind if I take a brief look?" he asked, addressing Mr. Kenting. "I'm tremendously interested in the subject, don't you know."

"By all means go right in," said Mr. Kenting, and Vance inquired casually,

"Oh, no," the woman told him—something bitterly. It seemed to me that it belonged to Mr. Kenting's sister. It was here in the house when I first came, long after his death."

Nearly arranged in a row, were specimens in various shapes and sizes, of various semi-precious stones. Many of these gems were most beautifully cut and vividly faceted, and I was admiring their lustrous beauty, impressed by what I assumed to be their great value, when Vance murmured to me,

"A most amazing and disquieting collection. Only one gem of real value, and that rare specimen among the rest. A sapphire as prominent, really very queer. And these seem to be many blank specimens."

I looked at him in amazement. Then his voice trailed off, and he suddenly wheeled about and returned to the hall.

"Most unusual collection. Hardly representative, though. Was your father an expert, Mr. Kenting?"

"Oh, yes. He studied the subject for many years. He was very proud of this gemstone, as you call it."

"Ah!"

Kenting shot the other a peculiar, sidelong look, but he said nothing. Vance at once followed Heath to the wide staircase.

As we entered Kaspar Kenting's bedroom, Captain Dulac and Detective Bellamy were just preparing to leave it.

"I don't think there's anything for you, Sergeant," Dulac reported to Heath after his respectful greetings to Markham. "Just the usual kind of marks and stains you'd find in any bedroom—and they all check up with the fingerprints on the silver toilet set and the glass in the bathroom. Can't be any one else's fingerprints except the guy who lives here. Nothing new anywhere."

"And the window sill?"

"Not a thing, Sarg—absolutely not a thing."

Kaspar Kenting's bedroom was distinctly old-fashioned and conventional in the extreme.

There were two windows in the room, one at the front and the other overlooking the street; the other was in the east wall, and I recognized it at once as the window through which Mrs. Kenting had been run in her flight. It was thrown wide open, with the Venetian blind drawn up, and the view of the room, to the right of the bed, was a door, now wide open. Beyond it another bedroom, similar to the one in which we stood, was identifiable; it was obviously Mrs. Kenting's boudoir.

"When you came in here this morning, Mrs. Kenting, was it the hall door locked or bolted?" Vance asked.

The woman looked uncertain and faltered in her answer.

"I—I—really, I can't remember. It must have been unlocked, or else I would probably have noticed it. I don't recall unlocking it."

Vance went to the open window and looked down at the ladder.

As he did so Heath took from his pocket a knife such as boy scouts use, and pried loose the thumb-tack which held a soiled and wrinkled sheet of paper to the broad window sill. He picked up the paper grim-of both nations are concerned. The lately negotiated accord between London and Rome has allayed the fiction between England and Italy. England recognizes Italian sovereignty in Ethiopia and Italy agrees to keep its hands off Egypt and not to interfere with British access to the Suez Canal. But where Italy would stand in general European war is still in doubt.

None of my newspaper friends, from whose reports I draw most of my conclusions about the European situation, believes that Mussolini likes the idea of having Germany as his next-door neighbor, which has come about through Hitler's seizure of Austria. Mussolini had his eye on Paris, if not all of Austria. Now it will be harder for him to take Yugoslavia when he gets ready unless he plays ball with Germany.

AMERICA's western hemisphere policy, with the nations of the entire Eastern Hemisphere ready to fly at each other's throats, the only part of the world which can reasonably expect continued peace is still the Western Hemisphere is America. The Western Hemisphere is the newest and least developed half of the world. The United States of America, as the most powerful and prosperous nation of this hemisphere, must be the spearhead of any united resistance to aggression or penetration by European powers.

We kept out of the League of Nations, which has demonstrated its futility as an agency for the preservation of peace. My personal idea is that the Pan-American Union, in which every North and South American nation participates, should be developed into a League of Nations of the Western Hemisphere.

It would be this country's job to do most of the "policing" on behalf of the smaller nations as well as our own. Autocracy is victorious in the coming European conflict. It is as certain as anything in the future can be that the victors will try to take over as much of America as they can. That is why I am for a navy big enough to protect both coasts.

Parliamentary Practice

The meeting had dragged on interminably. The president was anxious to leave, but there were still a few obstinate members who insisted on continuing until the matter in question was settled, although it was apparent that no progress was being made.

At last he could stand it no longer. "All those in favor of adjournment," he announced, "may signify by getting up and leaving—opposed the same!"

And he walked out.

"RICHMOND TO THE OHIO!"

IN ITS first ten years, from 1837 to 1847, the Louisville Railroad's track was laid only from Doswell to Gordonsville in Virginia. However, far-seeing people realized the value of this line. Although none could imagine that it was to become the great trunk line you know as the Chesapeake and Ohio.

Q. As early as 1839, Claudius Crozet, then Principal Engineer of the State of Virginia, pointed to the Louisa as a "railroad of great importance" and declared a line of the Blue Ridge mountains possible. By 1847 the valiant little road poorly financed and impeded by unfriendly interests, none the less made bold plans for its future. It would cross the mountain barrier, with the Ohio River as its goal... would extend the line westward via Charlottesville... and, since an important east-west trunk line must have a tide connection, would extend eastward to an independent terminus at Richmond.

"Richmond to the Ohio!" were words for the directors of such an infant line. But they were not to be stopped by public indifference, troublesome injunctions, or lack of funds. Granted a charter, they undertook to extend the road to Richmond—27 miles—by no other means than a subscription of $3,000 by individuals!

Q. A vision of success... and a unity of purpose... each qualified in these national pioneers made a grand plan into a great railroad. And such qualities form the ideal which today guides the Chesapeake and Ohio in all relations with the public in the extensive territory it serves.

ly and handed it to Markham. The District Attorney took it and looked at it, his face grimed with trouble as he read it. The paper was of the ordinary typewriter quality and had been trimmed irregularly at the edges to disguise its original size. On it were pasted words and separate characters in different sizes and styles of type, apparently cut from a newspaper. The uneven lines, crudely put together read:

"If you want his back safe price will be 50 thousand $ otherwise killed will you no ware & when to leave money later."

This ominous communication was signed with a calligraphic signature consisting of two interlocking un-even squares which were outlined with black ink.

Vance glanced at it, as if it were of little interest to him, and read it through quickly, with the faint suggestion of a cynical smile.

He was about to return the paper to the bathroom when the woman drew his hand back and made a new examination of the note.

"Fingerprints," he murmured, "as yet it's most surprising. I had been watching and listening attentively, with a shrewd judicial air."

"I think Mr. Vance," he said, "I know what is in your mind. I do, and knowing the circumstances in this house, for a great number of years, I can assure you that it would be no shock to either of them if you were to state exactly what you think regarding this situation."

"I know that it would be heartening—I might even say, an act of mercy," he stated flatly, "if you believe, as I am convinced you do, that Kaspar planned this coup himself for reasons that are only too obvious."

"My dear sir!" returned Vance. "I would be glad to say anything which might relieve your anxiety, but I really don't know a word of your husband. But I'm sure you that at the present moment, 'the evidence' does not justify such a thing. The comfort of any such belief is, at this moment, there was an interruption. At the hall door appeared a man in a middie-aged man with a yellow moon-like face-sullen in expression. He had on a shabby butler's livery, which was too good for him and emphasized his awkward posture. A cringing and subservient self-effacement marked his general attitude despite his air of insolence.

"What is it, Weems?" Mrs. Kenting asked.

"There is a gentleman—an officer—at the front door," the butler answered in a surly tone, "who says he wants to see Sergeant Heath. He says his name is McLaughlin."

Heath nodded curly and looked up at Markham.

"That's all right, Chief," he said. "McLaughlin was the man on this last night, and I left word at the Bureau to send him up here as soon as they could locate him. I thought he might know something, or maybe he saw something that would give us a line on what happened here last night." Then he turned back to the butler. "Tell the officer to wait for me. I'll be down in a few minutes."

Golda Dillon Resigns Position

Morehead Girl Enjoyed Success With Pack-Horse Library

The readers and carriers of the Packhorse Library regret very much the resignation of Miss Golda Dillon, the project supervisor. At the time Miss Dillon took over the supervision of the project the library consisted of 275 books and 2,000 magazines and she has built it up until at the present we have 2720 books and 24,000 magazines in the library. The library now has a good selection of books, acquired through donations and money which has been raised for the library. Miss Dillon has made these selections and the demand for these books is so great that we are not able to meet this demand. She has formed 30 new centers since she has been supervisor. This has taken continual thought and constant work for her, she has had to contrive many ways to get the much needed books for the library. However this extra burden has only been a part of a game for her because each undertaking she goes at it to win, thinking not of the handicaps but of the goal she wants to reach.

We the carriers and readers hope this work will go on as successful as it is, it will, under the new supervisor. We will do everything possible to keep it the success Miss Dillon has made it.

Game Wardens Nab Squirrel Hunters

A drive to stop people from shooting squirrels out of season, threatened for some time by local game wardens, was launched this week as Wardens Robert Mutters of Morehead and Van Greene, Salt Lick, arrested Allen Collins and Clyde Collins on the charge.

According to evidence submitted at the trial the two men had eight squirrels in their possession. They were fined $50.00 here. The arrests were made on the North Fork of Licking.

M. Therapy Ashland was fined $25.00 for having five undersize newlights in possession. He was nabbed by Warden Mutters at the Triplett Creek dam in Morehead.

Christian Educators To Meet In State

Christian leaders in Kentucky and throughout the United States and Canada are planning to attend the Twentieth International Convention on Christian Education which is to be held in Columbus, Ohio, June 28 through July 3rd, in the Columbus Auditorium. The convention promises to be the most representative assemblage of Christians ever held in North America. It will include teachers and officers in the Sunday Schools, the vacation schools, week day schools, pastors, general officers of the church, specialists from forty or fifty national boards of Christian education and boards of missions—men and women representing a cross-section of Church leadership in North America.

The theme for the convention is "The Christian Challenge to the Modern World". Kentucky's minimum goal is 500 delegates at the convention.

RHINESTONES AND RUBIES

Barbara O'Neil, appearing in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Top Hat", wears this silver-gray dinner dress with full skirt, fitted bodice and cap sleeves. The only difference is a series of three rhinestone and ruby clips worn at the high neckline. With the gown Miss O'Neil wears a matching fitted full length coat of the same line which buttons snugly at the normal waistline and features wide stiffened revers.

Kentucky Sunday School Association, together with denominational agencies and others are urging individuals and churches, communities, and counties as possible to Columbus, to share in this study of Christian service for today. This, it is felt, will stimulate the progress of Christian education in Kentucky in a way that nothing else can. Information concerning the convention may be secured from the Kentucky Sunday School Association, 504 South Third St., Louisville, denominational headquarters or the International Council of Religious Education, 203 North Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Letters To The Editor

Editor, the Roanoke County News:
In your issue of last Thursday, your article concerning the accidental death of my wife, Mrs. Logan Fannin, was somewhat in error. There was an eyewitness to this accident who will testify that my wife was standing close to the shoulder of the road when she was struck. There were no other cars on the road at the time of the accident and the driver of the car had the whole road on one side and a corn-field on the other side. He crossed on the wrong side of the road and hit and killed my wife. That is how he came to go into the ditch.

Seeing Things...

As usual at some big rally in Lexington the Phoenix Hotel lobby was crowded after Saturday's speech by Senator Barkley.

"Walkin' Munn" Wilson mounted the rostrum and after attracting the attention of those gathered, he cut loose with...

"Ladies and Gentlemen: I am speaking at Cheapside this evening and you are all invited. My subject will be 'The New Deal in Washington and the Raw Deal at Frankfort'."

A highway near Paintsville has been in such bad shape for the last two years that the people have been built in the air for months attempting to get a road built.

The most forbidding reminder to the tourist comes as he passes a large sign, erected in a farmer's pasture (and not on the state right-of-way), opposite one of the worst places in the road. It reads:

This road has been under construction

Ever Since Chandler Became Governor
Vote For Barkley!

A short time after this appeared a State Highway grader was on the spot and attempted to smooth out the bad spots on the road.

A young man was tried in Circuit Court Tuesday charged with carrying concealed a deadly weapon. Two persons swore they saw the young man take the loaded gun from his pocket. Two others testified they were present at the time and they did not see him with a gun.

The young man was acquitted.

State Highway police recently arrested a daughter of Dr. A. T. McCormack, head of the State Department of Health, here for driving "in transit" tags illegally. Miss McCormack had purchased a new car in Louisville and was driving it to Washington, where she lives. It cost her $21.50 to get out of the difficulty. She will also have to buy a new set of tags in Washington, D. C.

We wonder what Dr. McCormack one of the State's most influential leaders, thinks now of the addition of hundreds of highway policemen.

The recreation program to be launched by Ellis Johnson for children and teenagers here deserves commendation from the citizenry. Mr. Johnson is doing this additional work without pay. It should provide the best supervised playground activity that Morehead has ever had.

States. Miss Luzader has built up a considerable following in her chosen profession here where she conducts classes in all types of dancing throughout the winter months. She is a graduate of the Jean Kelly School of Dancing in Pittsburgh and Johnston, Pa., and it was largely through her recommendation of Mr. Kelley that she received the invitation to attend the convention and meet the school.

This year will mark the silver anniversary of the establishment of the Association of Dancing and special plans are being made for its observance.

Miss Luzader will be accompanied by her aunt Mrs. Gertrude Snyder.

Stand For The New Deal

As often as he rejected the name of President Roosevelt into his remarks, he was greeted with applause.

To agriculture, he said, "we have restored its credit" to labor we have given a greater opportunity for gainful employment at wages more in keeping with decent standards of living, and to "honest American business we have sought and are seeking protection from monopoly."

Not specifically mentioning Kentucky's maximum old-age pension payment of $15 a month, the senator expressed the hope every state "will rise to the obligation contemplated by congress" and "the maximum of $30 a month which federal legislation permits."

"We never thought," he added, "of departing from his prepared text," "that the right of any man or woman to draw a pension would depend on whom they vote for or United States senator."

Every WPA (work relief) worker, every highway employee and every employe of the state and national governments, he declared, "has a God-given right to vote as they please."

Defending the rest of the new six years more the senator contending program, Barkley, denied "the clause," recalling his campaign judgement on "the record of the New Deal and "are to determine whether one who has labored for the accomplishments of these things x x x shall be again commissioned to represent you."

The senator dealt briefly with New Deal legislation affecting finance, farming, banking, employment and social security, business, home owners, investors, youth, and foreign relations, all of which, he said, was enacted "to transform our government into the servant, guide and partner" of the people.

Roosevelt, the senator continued, has increased the national debt from $23,000,000,000 to $38,000,000,000 "but ten billion will be repaid and is being repaid" leaving a net increase of about $5,000,000,000.

"But during these five years" he said "we have doubled the income of agriculture" and "have added $20,000,000,000 a year to the net income of the American people."

MARK TWAIN Keeping The Big Bad Wolf Away

Are you in debt? Did you ever lose any money through making a bad investment? Well, if so, you may find consolation in the fact that some of the most brilliant men who ever lived made fools of themselves when it came to investing money. Take Mark Twain for example. He had the ability to make the whole world laugh—or cry, yet when it came to investing money, he didn't have any more sense than you and I had—back in 1829.

He lost almost a hundred thousand dollars in all sorts of inventions, such as steam generators, marine telegraphs, and other marvelous machines that were going to revolutionize the printing industry. There was only one gadget that was too fantastic for Mark Twain to invest in, and that was a queer sort of contraption called a telephone. He offered a whole battal of bells, but he turned it down with a snort—turned down a proposition that would have made him untold millions. Instead, he went into business with one of his relatives—and you know what that means. He lost everything except the kitchen stove.

His friend, H. H. Rogers, of the Standard Oil Company, offered to pay his debts on the basis of fifty cents on the dollar. But Mark Twain wouldn't hear of it. His admirers started a national subscription, and checks came pouring in from all over the country, but Mark Twain returned every one of the contributions and insisted on paying his debts himself. He devoted long hard years until he made a trip around the world, lecturing and living in hotels suffering from some sickness and boredom. He sacrificed six years of his life to pay his debts, but he finally paid them.

General Grant was brilliant enough to conquer Lee, win the Civil War, and become President of the United States; but he wasn't smart enough to keep his money. During the last years of his life, two sharpers got hold of Grant, and persuaded him to go into business with them. Then these men used Grant's good name to manipulate all sorts of crooked deals. When the crash came, Grant, in order to pay his debts, handed over his farm, his houses in Philadelphia and New York, and even the swords and trophies that had been presented to him.

He didn't have a dollar, and he was dying of cancer. He realized that when he was dead, his widow would be poverty-stricken. So, in order to provide for her, he decided to write his memories. He dictated until the cancer in his throat got so bad he couldn't speak. Then he finished the book with a pencil—finished it while he was suffering agony. He wrote the last chapter only three days before he died. Mark Twain published the book, and Mrs. Grant almost half a million dollars in royalties.

Mrs. Abraham Lincoln got so deeply in debt that she had to sell her dresses and furs and jewels. After she left the White House, she was so pressed for cash that she even sold her dear husband's shirts and paid Mrs. Grant almost half a million dollars in royalties.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Written Each Week By B. H. KAZEE, Pastor of The Baptist Church

SUBJECT: SHARING SERVICE WITH THE LIVING CHRIST Mark 16:18, 14:16, 19:20.

Text: "And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following." Mark 16:20.

We are now at the close of the quarter and at the close of the Book of Mark. The great triumph has come, the Resurrection, and the disciples are permitted to enter into a life of service with the living Lord.

It must have been quite gloomy for the disciples the few days previous to this lesson. As Peter said, they had "left all and followed Thee." They had thought of Jesus as a great conqueror, but had not had assurance of how things would turn out. They had to await each day's fulfillment of his life to learn what the outcome would be. Then came the betrayal, the hostile group seized Jesus, and step by step through the courts they led him, marking, shaming, and discrediting his claims, until the disciples were heavy of heart and afraid. Then came judgement and the crucifixion, and then the grave. Their hero was dead. What would they do? He had said something about coming back, but that was very mysterious to them who had no knowledge of what a resurrection would be like.

The work hour had come, and the disciples were cast down and weary. To appoint the body of the dead Lord was the best thing Mary Magdalene and the other Mary could think of doing. They came with their spices to pay loving tribute, on the first day of the week. The tomb was sealed by the Roman seal, and one dare to break it. "Who shall roll away the stone?" was the question.

The answer came with a look at the tomb. The stone was rolled back, and inside, a man clothed in white beauty was sitting on the right side. This angel who had scared the Roman guard almost to death, spoke to these afflicted guests, and told them to be afraid. "I know whom you seek. Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified. He is not here; he is risen; he holds the place where they had made seal, and one dare to break it. "Who shall roll away the stone?" was the question.

Amazed, trembling, thrilled with the prospect of seeing the Lord, they ran away from the tomb. They said nothing to any man, for they were afraid. Then the announcement of the rest of the disciples brought new hope, new joy, new thrills of life.

Ere long Jesus confirmed the announcement by personal appearances. They were again with their Lord, the living Lord. As He had done before them throughout his ministry, and through the Cross and through the grave, and into Galilee. He was to go on before them in their work for Him. He led the way into Heaven, to identify the risen body of man with God, and sent His Spirit back to the body of man to lead him in all the work of the Lord. This is what the resurrection has accomplished. Jesus, who arose, and is alive forever more, makes those who die by faith in Him arise to walk in newness of life, to be alive forever more, and to follow Him at last to the presence of God.

Now the living Lord bids his children preach the Gospel in a world which is unfriendly to Him, but in which the Gospel will make its conquest, because we go in company with Him who is alive forever more. With Him we cannot fail.

Lowe is assigned to the task of "springing" the elusive Miss West, a job which is not an easy one for him since he happens to be in love with her.

Also seeking Miss West is Walter Catlett, a theatrical producer who wants her to head a new show. If then becomes necessary for Miss West to don a black wig, acquire a French accent and become "Mile Pitt," an actress who takes the town by storm.

Much Lumber Is Given By Forest Service

1241 residents of Cumberland National Forest have been given 2,107,000 board feet of timber during the past year by the United States Forest Service. It was announced by the Forest Supervisor in Winchester today.

The material given the residents consisted of 2,057,000 board feet of dead and down timber and 50,000 board feet of green timber valued at about $100,000. Materials received by the residents have been fire wood, fence posts, fence rails, board feet and tree trunks. Each resident is allowed a nominal amount of such timber each year for domestic use.

In return, those who are given what the Forest Service calls "Free Use Permits" to take this timber agree to report and fight, free of charge, any forest fire which may occur in their locality.

The policy of giving timber has long been an established Forest Service practice, resulting in a mutual benefit to both the resident and the Forest Service by furnishing the residents material for the repair and construction of buildings and fences and to the Forest Service by aiding it in the job of prevention and suppression of forest fires.

Free use permits are issued by the District Ranger or his Assistant and he is responsible for the control of the use of such permits in his district. The number of permits issued during the past year has been a considerable increase over that of the previous year and the issuance of such permits had caused the local residents to look upon the Forest Service as a friend when they were in need of lumber.

When you dig the weeds from your lawn carry a small bag of lawn seed with you and drop a pinch of seed in every "hole" left by the weed. This will keep your lawn even and the grass will crowd out new weeds which might come from a fragment of root left in the ground.

New York in its most glittering romantic mood—the mood of the Gay Nineties and the Naughty Thirties, the period that saw "Dip, Mood Jim" Brady, "Jubilee Jim" Fiske and other bon vivants at their gayest, is the playground of curmudgeon Mae West in her new film comedy, "Every Day's A Holiday," starting Friday at the Cocy Theatre.

Set at the turn of the century, Miss West's latest adventure is the story of a girl with a penchant for selling the Brooklyn Bridge to unsuspecting strangers, an idiosyncrasy which gets her into difficulties with the police, particularly Edmund Lowe, a detective who is assigned to the task of "bringing in" the elusive Mae West, a job which he not an easy one for him since he happens to be in love with her.

Also seeking Miss West is Walter Catlett, a theatrical producer who wants her to head a new show; it then becomes necessary for Miss West to don a black wig, acquire a French accent and become "Mile Fifi," an actress who takes the town by storm.

"Mile Fifi" becomes involved in a better government crusade before the picture comes to its hectic finish—an election which sweeps Lowe into office on a reform ticket.

The cast of brilliant players in

"Every Day's A Holiday," includes Charles Butterworth, Charles Finlinger (named "Cap'n Henry" of "Show Boat"), Lloyd Nolan, Herman Bing, Chester Conklin, Louis Armstrong and his Orchestra, and many others.

Much Lumber Is Given By Forest Service

1241 residents of Cumberland National Forest have been given 2,107,000 board feet of timber during the past year by the United States Forest Service, it was announced by the Forest Supervisor in Winchester today.

The material given the residents consisted of 2,057,000 board feet of board and down timber and 50,000 feet of green timber valued at about $1,000,000. Materials received by the residents have been firewood, fence posts, fence rails, board trees and bee trees. Each resident is allowed a nominal amount of such timber each year for domestic use.

In return, those who are given the Forest Service calls "Free Use Permits" to take this timber agree to report and fight, free of charge, any forest fire which may occur in their locality.

The policy of giving timber has long been an established Forest Service practice, resulting in a mutual benefit to both the residents and the Forest Service by furnishing the residents material for the repair and construction of builders and fences and to the Forest Service by aiding it in the job of prevention and suppression of forest fires.

Free use permits are issued by the District Ranger or his Assistant and he is responsible for the control of the use of such permits in his district. The number of permits issued during the past year has been a considerable increase over that of the previous year and the issuance of such permits has caused the local residents to look upon the Forest Service as a friendly landlord and neighbor.

When you dig the weeds from your lawn carry a small bag of lawn seed with you and drop a pinch of seed in every hole left by the weed. This will keep your lawn even and the grass will grow out new weeds which might come from a fragment of root left in the ground.

LESS COSTLY CUTS OF MEAT STRESSED

Greater use of less-expensive cuts of meat was stressed at nine meetings held by the Kentucky College of Agriculture and the National Livestock and Meat Board.

Modern ways of cutting the animal carcass, the cooking and preparation of all kinds of meats, food values of the various parts of the animal, and other subjects relating to meat consumption were discussed by Grady Ballard of the College of Agriculture and R. G. Plager of the National Livestock and Meat Board of Chicago.

A total of 528 persons attended the meetings, including town and country people and members of homemakers' clubs. County and home agents assisted in making the arrangements for the meetings.

WESTERN KENTUCKY LAND IS RESTORED

A 20-acre field at the Western Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station produced 40 bushels of corn to the acre last year, compared to an average yield of 10 to 15 bushels when it became a part of the experimental farm in 1928.

At this writing, there is good prospect of heavy crops of early potatoes, and many families will have enough potatoes for the year.

Late potatoes are several varieties, chief among which are Green Mountain and McCormick, Pearl and Peachbloss, the latter three collectively called "late potatoes."

Produced during July through September, as they are, late potatoes usually must run the gauntlet of a hot and sometimes dry season, quite unfriendly to the crop.

Discussing moisture first, late potato ground should be prepared long before planting is to take place in this wise: The land should be broken early, before the late of the spring rains have fallen.

With the soil deeply broken and deeply prepared, deep planting can be done. Thus the seed, and later the roots of the potato find conditions comparatively cool, and at least part of the hot season is avoided.

Further to help as to both moisture-holding ability and friendly soil temperature, for the two go together, a generous amount of vegetable matter should be turned under. This may be stable manure in which straw predominates and of which horse manure is only a small part or entirely lacking, or it may be seven manure, a coat of cover or grass or even of weeds.

Stems of Weakness "One has to realize that submissiveness and domination are two expressions of one and the same underlying feeling of weakness. There is no need for any one who has a sound self-esteem, to be domineering. Besides a domineering attitude has, as you all know, its repercussions."

Speaking From Experience

The teacher of mathematics was explaining to her class the main reason for the study of this particular subject. "Money and its exchange," she said, "is the chief reason for a knowledge of numbers. Unless we had money we would have little need for the study of mathematics."

At this point a boy in the class started forth the nearest exit. "John," demanded the teacher, "where are you going?"

"Out!" repeated the teacher in bewildered tones. "Out," confirmed the lad as he sadly shook his head. "This is no subject for a minister's son."

Asthma Cause Fought in 3 Minutes

By clearing and removing mucus from the chest passages, coughing, choking, wheezing, and asthma can be relieved. Mucus removes the cause of irritation, and the chest passages are kept open. Starts work in 3 minutes. Most asthma attacks are relieved in 3 minutes. Mucus is the cause of asthma. Mucus is the cause of asthma. Mucus is the cause of asthma.
