Let The Majority Decide. A large portion of the heavily populated sections outside the city limits has been incorporated by the city council but this week an injunction was filed to halt the proposed annexation.

Perhaps there are arguments both for and against incorporation. We know that one of the reasons being advanced by those who do not want incorporation is that it would fall their lot to pay a large street paving bill which is now in litigation in court. Another reason is to prevent tax increase.

On the other hand, those seeking incorporation say that it will bring police and fire protection, city water and gas and would lower insurance rates. Petitions have been circulated back and forth regarding the incorporation.

Imitating The Old And New

"We are delivering the checks to the people on the old age assistance roll this month in person," declared Fredrick A. Wallis at a Chandler rally in Georgetown Saturday. He explained that the checks were being delivered to each one in person this month because the State wished to know whether these people really needed them.

The checks came into Rowan County this week. The old age pension supervisor delivered them in person. Here, in substance, is what was told each person who drew one of these checks: "If it were not for Governor Chandler, we wouldn't have any old age pension. He is providing these checks for you and wants your vote on August 6."

Fortunately our old people are not so easily bamboozled and deflected. True, the majority of them are saying little because the State Administration has already proved itself so ruthless that they fear it would attempt to deprive old people of this rightful pension if they openly opposed the Governor.

What the persons who delivered those checks didn't tell these needy persons was that the Federal Administration launched the old age pension and Senator Barkley's name stands in the Congressional Record as voting for a $9 pension but a $39 a month pension. What they didn't tell the aged persons was that one-half of the money is being paid by the Federal Government. What they didn't tell the old people who have passed the prime of life and richly deserve this assistance is that the state of Ohio pays the people an average pension of $24.67 while Kentucky pays but an average of $9.70.

The persons who delivered these checks are also drawing one-half of their salary from the Federal government.

It is indeed a sad state of affairs when the State Administration tries to intimidate our old and needy persons by virtually threatening to cut off their pensions if they do not vote one way. We challenge Gov. Chandler or any person connected with the Chandler campaign to deny any of the above statements.

We likewise ask Governor Chandler or any member of the Chandler organization here to show where Federal employees, which includes those working for the WPA, in Rowan County have ever been intimidated, assessed or told they must vote one way or another. Every WPA employee knows that with their checks they receive a letter stating "you have the right to vote as you please without fear of interference or losing your job."

Incidentally, we may mention that Dr. A. Y. Lloyd, director of Old Age Assistance, through the Federal government's method of handling the checks is much the same manner that he has talked about everything else that President Roosevelt and Congress has done. On the heels of his violent attack and his plea to the tobacco farmers comes the following headlines in metropolitan newspapers: "Kentucky Tobacco Growers Endorse Barkley." The headline referred to the resolutions passed by the Western Dark Fired Tobacco Association which has a membership of 9,000 Kentucky farmers.

The resolution read: "The Western Dark Fired Tobacco Association makes public acknowledgment of the invaluable service rendered from time to time by Senator Barkley in the interest of the tobacco growers of Kentucky, and especially in behalf of the 9,000 members of this association, and now expresses to him heartiest thanks for his generous and timely assistance and cooperation, and most cordial good wishes for a continuance of highly deserved honors."

Governor Chandler didn't you think it is about time that you wake up to the realization that you can get on the stump and speak all day, but the farmer can very easily get his check book and find out how much he realized from tobacco before Roosevelt took office and now he can easily compare his profits then with those realized under Barkley supported tobacco legislation.

If Governor Chandler should stop to consider how his arguments on tobacco legislation are going over he would know that the vast majority of the tobacco farmers are against him. That alone should show that his argument is weak and the quotations which he makes are faltered.

Open Your Eyes To The Light Of Truth

In this issue appears one of the most eye-opening statements it has ever been our good fortune to publish. We refer to the statement covering the extent of the expenditures and assistance rendered by the Federal Government to this and other counties in this section.

The statement is of particular interest at this time, in view of the fact that the state administration is attempting to belittle the work that has been done for Kentucky by Senator Barkley and the Federal Government. Any one living in any one of these counties, who fails to see what the work of Senator Barkley means to them and their county, must of necessity be stone blind and particularly dumb.

Tom Logan Comes Out For Barkley

Election Of Barkley Means Much To Party, He Declares

Today I submitted my resignation as a member of Governor Chandler's official family to Governor Chandler, and I desire in this statement to explain to the Young Democrats of Kentucky and to the Older Democrats in Kentucky the reasons that prompted me in supporting the Honorable Alben W. Barkley in the race for election to the Senate of the United States.

Senator Alben W. Barkley today is the majority leader of the United States Senate. A position of leadership that he attained after years of service to the people of this Commonwealth in the Congress of the United States. The leadership of the majority party is in many respects a more important position than the presidency of the United States, and his failure to be returned, by the people of Kentucky, to the United States Senate would be a great loss to the prestige of Kentucky as well as a great loss to the Democratic Party in the Nation.

The election of Governor Chandler to the office of Governor of Kentucky, Alben W. Barkley, whose humanitarian program has meant so much to our State and Nation. My conscience would not permit me to vote for any man to replace Senator Barkley when to do so would be to vote against our great leader, Governor Chandler, President Roosevelt, President Roosevelt with Senator Barkley at his side has changed the whole life trend of the American People. A new liberalism fighting for the people has replaced supine conservatism in this Nation.

The Democratic Party in this State and Nation is a majority party today for the reason that it is the only party that justifies the faith it will continue to be a majority party as long as it keeps faith with the American people. The leadership of the Democratic Party is in the hands of President Roosevelt who has demonstrated to the world again that he is determined to keep faith with American people. President Roosevelt relies on Senator Alben W. Barkley in his leadership of the United States Senate to help him keep this faith. The achievements of these two great leaders are written with indelible ink into every laborer's salary check, into every farmer's home and every mother's brain in Kentucky and in America.

Kentuckians, I am sure, are proud and honored by the recognition that has come to one of their native sons, The Democracy of Kentucky through the Young Democrats and through the Older Members of the Party will join hands in this election and say to that great humanitarian in the White House, that we here in Kentucky will keep faith with you and the Democratic Party as you have kept faith with us, that we here in Kentucky will be the first to turn this Government of ours back to the industrial deposits and Wall Street racketeers. We desire and we will send to the United States Senate the man whom our President wants, the man whom through training and experience and the position he holds will be able to help President Roosevelt carry out to a successful conclusion his great liberal program in behalf of the American people. If for one joint Senator Barkley and President Roosevelt with full appreciation of the splendid record made in State Government by Governor Chandler, for the reason that I have stated above and for the additional reason that I believe further re-election will be given to Governor Chandler by the people of Kentucky in appreciation of his services to this Commonwealth, and they will be given at a time when it so would not bring harm to the Democratic Party in the state and Nation, to a great leader in the White House, and to the cause of liberalism he represents and fights for.

I urge all the people of Kentucky to join with me in returning to the Senate of the United States The Honorable Alben W. Barkley, whose re-election means so much to all of us now and in the future. I remain, Respectfully yours, Thos. M. Logan.

The following is the letter of Mr. Logan to Governor Chandler.

July 1888, Hon. Albert B. Chandler, Governor, Frankfort, Kentucky. Dear Governor Chandler: I have been a member of your official family since you were inaugurated Governor. I aided and assisted in electing you Governor of this Commonwealth and I hoped that it would be possible for you to continue as chief executive of this Commonwealth during your term without becoming a candidate for another office.

However, you have seen fit to become a candidate for the United States Senate against the advice of some of your best friends and well-wishers. In so doing, it has become necessary for you to take sides against the President of the United States and one of his ablest supporters, Senator Alben W. Barkley. The issues of the campaign are so drawn that any democrat supporting you will be anti-Roosevelt.

As a Democrat, I believe in the policies of the Democratic Party as advanced by President Roosevelt. This is to advise you that I cannot turn down the President of the United States in his constructive program and it becomes necessary to make a choice between you and Senator Barkley in his candidacy for renomination and reelection.

In order that there may be no embarrassment between you and I, herewith tender my resignation, to become effective at any time fixed by you. I remain, Respectfully yours, Thos. M. Logan.

KIDNAP MURDER Case

by S. S. Van Dine

Kenyon Kenting fidgeted a bit and shifted in his position on the chair. He did not answer at once but at length he said, in a half-hearted tone, "I would prefer not to go into that inasmuch as it regards a personal matter, and I can not see that it has any bearing on the present situation."

"That is a point for us to decide, I believe," Vance said in a peculiarly hard voice. "We should like you to answer the question."

"I'm afraid, sir," put in Markham, in his most aggressive official manner, "we must insist that you answer the question."

"Very well," he said resignedly. "If you insist. On Monday my brother asked me for a large sum of money—in fact, he was persistent about it, and became somewhat hysterical when I refused him."

"Did he state what he required this money for?" asked Vance.

"Oh, yes," the man said angrily. "The usual thing—gambling and unwarranted debts connected with some woman."

"Would you be more specific as to the gambling debts?" pursued Vance.

"Well, you know the sort of thing," Kenting again shifted in his chair. "Roulette, black jack, the heritage cards—but principally horses. He owed several book-makers some preposterous amount."

"Do you happen to know the names of any of these book-makers?"

"No, I don't."

"What was so urgent about this as to produce hysterics?"

"The fact is," the other went on, "Kaspar told me the men were unscrupulous and dangerous, and that he feared for himself if he did not pay them off immediately. He said he had already been threatened."

"And you denied your brother the money?"

"I had to," asserted Kenting. "The amount would almost have bankrupted the estate, what with so much tied up in what we've come to call 'frozen assets.'"

"Did your brother approach Mr. Fleel about the matter?" Vance asked.

"Yes, he did," the other returned. "Whenever I refused him anything he goes immediately to Fleel. As a matter of fact, Fleel has always been more sympathetic with Kaspar than I have. But Kaspar's demand this time was utterly outrageous, and Fleel turned him down as definitely as I did."

"Has Mrs. Kenting any money of her own?" Vance asked unexpectedly.

"Nothing—absolutely nothing!" the man assured him. "She is entirely dependent upon what Kaspar gives her—which of course, means some part of what I allow him for the estate."

"In view of this morning's occurrence," suggested Vance. "It may be that your brother was not unduly exaggerating about the necessity for this money."

"This is a novel idea, sir," he said, half-uneasy. "When you receive further instructions regarding the ransom money, what do you intend to do about it—that is to say, just what is your feeling in the matter?"

"As a brother," he said solemnly, "what can I do? I suppose I must manage somehow to get the money and pay it. I can't let Kaspar be murdered."

"Yes—quite," agreed Vance. "And then there's Madeline. I could never forgive myself if I say again, it's a frightful situation. 'Nasty' mess. Rather, still, I have a groggy notion," Vance went on. "That you won't be called upon to pay the ransom money at all. And, by the by, Mr. Kenting, you didn't mention the amount that your brother asked for when you last saw him."

"I was hoping you wouldn't ask me that question," he said regretfully. "I avoided it purposely, for I am afraid it might create an erroneous impression."

young whippersnapper I've ever known. He always seems to be busy and has never earned so much as a penny. He's perfectly content to live here with his mother at the expense of the Kenting estate." The man's manner now had something of resentment and venom in it.

Vance rose. "Would you be so good as to take us upstairs?" he asked.

"I'll be glad to," Kenting said, and started for the door. We followed him.

Mrs. Falloway was a woman between sixty and sixty-five years old. She had an intelligent and canny expression, and her features were large and striking. She impressed me as a woman with an iron will, but also with an innate sense of loyalty and sympathy.

When we entered her room that morning Mrs. Falloway was sitting placidly in a wicker armchair in front of the large bay window.

At an old and somewhat dilapidated walnut secretary sat a thin, sickly youth with straight dark hair which fell forward over his forehead, and large, prominent features. The pale youth held a magnifying glass in one hand and was moving it back and forth over a page of exhibits in a stamp album.

"The gentlemen wish to speak to you, Mrs. Falloway," Kenyon Kenting said in an unfriendly tone. When he had gone, Vance took a few steps toward the woman with an air of solicitation.

"Perhaps you remember me, Mrs. Falloway?"

"Oh, very well, Mr. Vance. It is very pleasant to see you again. Do sit down in that armchair there, and try to imagine that this meager room is a Louis-Seize salon."

Vance bowed formally. "Any room you grace, Mrs. Falloway," he said, "becomes the most charming of salons." He did not accept her invitation to sit down, however.

"What do you make of this situation?" she went on. "And do you really think anything has happened to my son-in-law?" Her voice was hard and low-whispered.

"I really cannot say just yet," Vance answered. "We were hoping you might be able to help us," and the woman acknowledged the introductions with dignified graciousness.

"This is my son, Frain," she said, waving with a bony hand toward the anemic young man at the desk. "Philanthropist" asked Vance, studying the youth.

"I collect American stamps," Vance said. "There was no enthusiasm in the exchange, voice, and Vance did not pursue the subject.

"Did you hear anything in the house early this morning?" Vance asked.

Kaspar Falloway shook his head without any show of interest.

"I didn't hear anything," he said. "I was asleep."

Vance turned to the mother.

"Did you hear anything, Mrs. Falloway?"

"I heard Kaspar come in—he woke me up banging the front door shut. She spoke with bitterness. 'But that's nothing new. I want to sleep again, however, and didn't know anything had happened until Madeline and Mr. Kenyon Kenting informed me of it this morning, after my breakfast.'"

"Could you suggest any reason," asked Vance, "why any one should wish to kidnap Kaspar Kenting?"

"No. But I can give you many reasons why any one should not wish to kidnap him," she returned with a hard, intolerant look. "He is not an admirable character," she went on, "nor a pleasant person to have around. And I regret the day my daughter married him. However, I wouldn't wish to see any harm come to the scamp."

"And why not, madam?" asked Frain Falloway with a whine. "You know perfectly well he has made us all miserable, including myself. Personally, I think it's good riddance."

"Don't be vindictive, son," the woman reproved him with a sudden softening in her tone, as she turned back to his stamps.

Vance sighed as if his inter-church, inter-screen mother and son bored him.

"Then you are not able, Mrs. Falloway, to suggest any reason for Mr. Kenting's sudden disappearance or to tell us anything that might be of at all helpful?"

"No, I know nothing, and have nothing to tell you."

"In that case," Vance returned politely, "I think we had better be going downstairs."

The woman picked up her cane and struggled to her feet, despite Vance's protestations.

"If I wish I could help you," she said with sudden kindness. "But I am so well isolated these days with my infirmity. Walking, you know, is quite a painful process for me."

"I'm afraid I'm growing old," she said. "In the hall Vance waited till the door was shut."

"An amusing old girl," he remarked. "Her mind is as young and shrewd as it ever was. Unpleasant young citizen, Frain. He's as ill as the old lady, but he doesn't know it. Endocrine imbalance," Vance continued as we went downstairs. "Needs medical attention. I wonder when he had a basal metabolism taken last."

"He simply looks like a weakling to me."

"Oh, yes. Doubtless. As you say, devoid of stamina. And full of resentment against his fellowmen and especially against his brother-in-law. When we had reached the lower hall Vance went immediately toward the drawing room and stepped inside.

Mrs. Kenting, who seemed perturbed and ill at ease, sat rigidly upright on the small sofa where we had first seen her. Her brother-in-law sat beside her, looking at her with a solicitous, comforting air. Fleel was leaning back in an easy chair near the door.

"I know you told us, Mrs. Kenting," Vance began, "that you could not describe the men who called on your husband several nights ago. I wish, however, you could make an effort to give us at least a general description of them."

"The fact is, Mr. Vance, I paid little attention to them, but I know that one of them was a large man and seemed to me to have a very thick neck. And as I recall, there was a lot of grey in his hair and he may have had a clipped mustache."

"Your description, madam," remarked Vance, nodding his head, "corresponds to the appearance of a certain gentleman I have in mind; and if it is the same person, your impression regarding the clipped mustache is quite correct."

"Oh, who was he, Mr. Vance? Do you think you know who is responsible for this terrible thing?"

"No," he said, "I'm deeply sorry I cannot offer any hope in that particular quarter. If this man who called on your husband is the one I think it is, he is merely a good-natured book-maker who is at times aroused to futile anger when his clients fail to pay their debts. I'm quite sure, don't you know, that if he should pop in here again at the present moment, you would find him inclined to exert his efforts in your behalf. I fear that we must dismiss him as a possibility."

As Vance spoke he rose from his chair and turned to Fleel, who had been listening intently to Vance's brief interchange with Mrs. Kenting.

For UNITED STATES SENATOR

ALBEN W. BARKLEY

Remember the voters analyze the two men. Remember the big promises that Chandler made you in 1935 and how many he won't deny that he has broken in 1938. Promises are easy, but the chances are that if Chandler were elected Senator and held that office for the rest of his life he would not reach the high position of leadership that Senator Barkley has already achieved.

Last Friday at Covington President Roosevelt, who has meant more to the average man than any President in the history of this nation, asked the people to return Alben W. Barkley to the Senate. He is a "son of Kentucky of whom the whole nation is proud," capably for twenty-six years.

By all rights he should have no opposition in this year's election. It is unfortunate, that one man—one job-seeker—who tried to make a trade on the judicial bench should contest the right of Senator Barkley to fill this seat which he has handled so capably for twenty-six years.

TEST PILOT IS COZY FEATURE
Half of the location equipment required for the filming of the new Clark Gable-Myrna Loy-Spencer Tracy aviation drama, "Test Pilot," currently playing at the Oxy Theatre Sunday and Monday was sent by plane.

Heavier equipment, such as the cameras, bottles, (number electrical wiring and properties were conveyed by regular motor trucks. The first aviation picture made by the studio in two years was handled with an air-minded attitude. Whenever possible, planes supplied slower transportation.

The company was grounded on one of the smoother pastures of a ranch. A three-hundred-year field served for landing and take-offs. Six cameras were spotted around the field to catch spectacular flying scenes. Dressing rooms were hastily constructed, offering a sharp contrast to the luxurious studio dressing rooms. Half the company wore straw hats in harmony with the rural scene.

Modern planes on the set were either silent while a ground scene was made, or roared into action for sky scenes. One of these, a tiny four-seater, had a top speed of 325 miles an hour and used 126 gallons of gasoline in an hour's flying.

The setting duplicated the average Kansas farm. Trees had been brought from the studio, fences were built, a silo was constructed to match the photographs of those of farms in the Mid-West.

The farm provided the opening scale for "Test Pilot," Clark Gable, trying to break the transcontinental air record, is forced down on the farm. There he meets Myrna Loy, unapologetic country girl. Studio experts reconstructed the typical Kansas farm on the Phillips ranch at Chino, California. When it was ready for filming the first aviation location trick was used away.

He Had Twenty-Seven Wives And Made Twenty-Six Of Them Knit Their Own Garters

Brigham Young, the great leader of the Mormon religion, married twenty-seven women and made all of them eat at the same table every day, and get down on their knees and pray together every night—and he managed to do this, year after year, without suffering any casualties.

Did I say he got all of his wives to eat at the same table? Well, I am wrong. I should have said all, except one. There was a blonde—but I'll tell you about her later.

Why did Brigham Young want so many wives? Was he a lustful, sensuous creature, driven on by physical desires? No. Not at all. He was a very strict and a very religious man. He once said in a sermon, "There are probably few men on earth who care less than I do about the private society of women."

However, the Mormons took the Old Testament literally. They read that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and Solomon and David had practiced polygamy, and they believed that God by a divine and direct revelation had commanded them to marry a number of women and multiply and replenish the earth.

Brigham Young had fifty-eight children. His favorite wife bore him ten children, and eleven of his wives gave him no children at all. I have been gossiping, rather flippantly, perhaps, about Brigham Young's family life. But there is a far more significant side to his career. He attended school for only eleven and a half days in his entire life; yet he became one of the outstanding leaders of the nineteenth century. William H. Seward, who was Lincoln's secretary of State, declared that America never produced a greater statesman than Brigham Young.

After Brigham had married twenty-four women, he got into trouble. It was 1862, during the Civil War. Brigham was sixty-one years old. He met a blonde and fell wildly in love with her. Amelia was her name.

She was twenty-five. She had charm. She could play the piano and sing. He begged her to marry him, but she stuck her nose in the air and shook her blonde curls. And the more he insisted, the more reluctant she became. Finally, he offered her the keys to Heaven, and said that it was the Lord's will that she should marry him. So she consented.

Then the trouble started. She began "snubbing" the other wives. What? Live under the same roof with the rest of that riff-raff No sir! She ordered Brigham to build her a beautiful palace of her own, and he built her a house that was the show-place of Utah for many years.

Would she eat at the same table with those cats that were gossiping about her? No sir! She descended to eat in the same room with them, but she had a little private table of her own at the head of the room.

Brigham had been brought up in polygamy, so he was always lecturing to his wives about economy.

Did Amelia practice economy? She hoarded the idea.

Brigham Young had fifty-eight children. His favorite wife bore him ten children, and eleven of his wives gave him no children at all. I have been gossiping, rather flippantly, perhaps, about Brigham Young's family life. But there is a far more significant side to his career. He attended school for only eleven and a half days in his entire life; yet he became one of the outstanding leaders of the nineteenth century. William H. Seward, who was Lincoln's secretary of State, declared that America never produced a greater statesman than Brigham Young.

After Brigham had married twenty-four women, he got into trouble. It was 1862, during the Civil War. Brigham was sixty-one years old. He met a blonde and fell wildly in love with her. Amelia was her name.

She was twenty-five. She had charm. She could play the piano and sing. He begged her to marry

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Written Each Week By B. H. HAZARD, Pastor of The Baptist Church

SUBJECT: DEBORAH: EMERGENCY LEADERSHIP. Judges 4: 15, 12-14.

Golden Text: "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" Esther 4:14.

"And the children of Israel again did evil in the sight of the Lord, when Ehud was dead. And the Lord sold them into the hand of Jabin king of Canaan, that reigned in Hazor, the captain of whose host was Sisera, which dwelt in the chariots of the Gentiles. And the children of Israel cried unto the Lord: for he had nine hundred chariots of iron; and twenty years he mightily oppressed the children of Israel." So the record tells us. The Twelve Tribes of Israel had been in Canaan for one hundred and fifty years. For twenty years Jabin, King of Canaan, had oppressed the people from them. Israel was crying unto God. In a most unusual personality—Deborah, a woman—God answered their cry.

Deborah was a poetess and a prophetess, and her verses of courage and patriotism rang through the country, inspiring the people, until at last she was recognized as judge of Israel, and the people came to her. Israel, under her voice, saw their sin, and penitently cried to God.

Thus God works both with the people and a leader. Both are now prepared to break the bondage of slavery under Jabin. Deborah calls to Barak, a great military leader of Israel, and with her inspiring courage aroused his patriotism. She tells him that God has arranged to break the strong line of Sisera's finely equipped army and his nine hundred iron chariots. Barak tells Deborah he will not go unless she goes with him. She promises to go, but informs Barak that the victory but for the glory of God. "For Jehovah will sell Sisera into the hand of a woman."

Barak goes to Mount Tabor, and the news is quickly flashed to Sisera. With his chariots of iron and his well-disciplined men, he rushes to battle. The result is that Sisera is defeated, Israel conquers, and the reign of slavery is broken.

Who did it? God? Whom did He use? Deborah? God needed someone of courage, conviction, high principle, of faith. There were no men who met such a requirement at that time. But the voice of Deborah had been ringing through the land. Her courage had gripped the people. God used her. This is a high tribute to the courage of great women in the world's history. Joan of Arc, who led France to victory has been idealized for her great courage and sacrifice. A principle greater than herself lived within her. The finest things that have ever been done for the world have been done through the courage and leadership of great women. Women have been the great exponent of virtues living. What of the womanhood of today? Will it fall in this onslaught of drink, of sex debauchery, of the moral collapse that has seized the womanhood of today? We need the voice of a Deborah as we never needed it before.

Text Of President Roosevelt's Address At Latoria Meeting Friday

Text of Covington Address

The text of President Roosevelt's address at Latoria race track follows: I am glad to be back in Kentucky.

Every time I have come into the State in the past few years, I have not been able to forget a certain trip which I made across a large part of Kentucky in the autumn of 1932—six years ago. On that occasion, though I had been traveling in many States, what I saw in Kentucky stirred me more deeply than I had been stirred in my life—except in the days during the World War when I saw the misery and the suffering on the fields of France.

My train moved slowly in 1932, from Covington to Louisville and then on to Lexington and then through the villages and farming sections and mining districts. As we stopped at small stations, crowds gathered. Hunger stared out at me from the faces of men and women and little children.

It was a chilly day and for the actual want of clothes people stood there shivering. They were looking up at two men. One was a candidate for the Presidency who was going about the country telling people that the National situation was grave—so grave that the time for promises had come to an end and the time for action was at hand.

The other man on that train platform was a Senator from Kentucky—a man of experience in the affairs of his State and of the Nation—a man who had fought valiantly as a member of the United Democratic minority against doing nothing and in favor of action to meet growing needs.

On that day's trip, I know that Senator Barkley and I were thinking little in terms of partisan politics. We were thinking in terms of American needs—not just Kentucky's needs—but the deep-seated wants that had come into the lives of men and women scattered throughout every State in the Nation. There were in our eyes no party lines, no party colors, no party machinery but only the fact that these people still had faith—in the institutions of the United States—in the United States—faith that their Government would, before it was too late, come through.

On that trip, too, between stops, your Senator and I talked of many things. We talked of economic conditions and social conditions—of the thousands of things that had to be done in the Middle West and in the South and in the Far West if America as a Nation was to carry on.

I shall never forget that day because I saw things with my own eyes that made me think more deeply about the fundamentals of a life than I had ever thought before, and because I had an opportunity, that day, to talk of these things to a great American who had been on the "firing line" for years and had striven to avert disaster and was willing and able to give practical advice for the cure of it.

I will not recount the progress of the intervening years. You know the story there as well as I do. I wish that I could follow that same railroad route today. I wish that I could look into the faces of the same men and women and children I saw then. And if you could do it, I know very well that the facts of today would give the lie to those who seek the overthrow of this Administration by telling you, as they have been telling you for six months or more, that conditions in the United States can be compared with the conditions of 1932. You and I have intelligent and sound hand knowledge to laugh at this kind of political balldoo.

Because I could get no assistance from Washington, I was compelled to create State deficits—to put the State into the "red"—in order to feed the destitute and give work to the unemployed; in order to care for the thousands of people who had become dependent on the state for food and shelter.

And when I left Albany, the deficit of the State of New York was nearly a hundred million dollars.

That was the experience of most States. They could get no help from the National Government to meet National problems. They were in debt and their borrowing capacity was close to an end. That was also the experience of hundreds of cities and counties. They were not being paid to them and if they had had to liquidate they would have been insolvent.

Your Federal Government, the one that started on March 4, 1933—recognized this and promptly sought to restore the credit and the finances of the States, cities and counties. We put a National shoulder under National problems.

We understood that the program and work relief paid for by the Federal Government, thus helping your community to do a thousand things that individual communities could not afford to do by themselves—public works on a matching basis, thus enabling States and cities and counties to build buildings and bridges and roads and streets and water works which they could not afford to do alone or which took the support of men, women and children off the backs of communities.

Says State Got 250 Million

In the six years that have intervened, many of our States, because of help from the National Government, have got back into the "black" again—my own State of New York—and your own State of Kentucky among them. And I am heartily glad of it. Your Governor, my Governor, and good many other Governors are able to go before their people and announce proudly that they have balanced budgets.

More power to their arms! I am happy and proud of how much the Federal Government has been able to help Kentucky and other States. It would surprise many people to know how much that help has been. Take Kentucky for instance:

1.—In these six years, the Federal Government has allotted to Kentucky new kinds of Federal expenditures for relief, work relief, public works, the education of youth, farm rehabilitation and credit—about $200,000,000.

Tells Of Other Help

2.—In these six years the Federal Government has spent in more traditional forms of Federal expenditures, such as matching funds for State highways on a fifty-fifty basis, and the State for the building of State institutions, flood control and river works, Federal public buildings and the maintenance of the regular agricultural services—at least another fifty million dollars.

3.—In these six years, Federal loans, through R. F. C. H. O. L. C., Farm Credit Administration and other lending agencies—extending the date of obligations, scaling the interest on obligations, giving financial institutions and borrowers alike a chance to reorganize and turn around—have averted from the taxable wealth and the taxable citizens of Kentucky the cost of bearing the liquidation of the 1929 depression. That, I conservatively estimate, has saved the financial resources of the State of Kentucky several hundred million dollars.

Says It Was Worth It

4.—And, finally, in these six years the prompt willingness of the Federal Government to take care of flood damage, to begin the prevention of soil erosion, to invest in the protection of Kentucky's natural capital and property while Kentucky had to save on those items, is worth more incalculable millions of dollars.

Add all that up when next you wonder why the National Government hasn't balanced its budget over the last six years.

If the Federal Government had not done at least some of these things, the State governments would probably not have done them at all out of their own resources. By assistance like this, not only in Kentucky, but in other States, the Federal Government was able to get out of the "red" and into the "black"—and that holds true for the credit of almost every State of the Nation and county throughout the country.

It has taken courage for the Federal Government to go into the "red" to help State and local governments get out of the "red" or stay out of the "red". But it is the human needs of tens of thousands of the citizens of that State.

Your Governor deserves the credit for getting this State on a sound financial basis. He never came to Washington and went away empty-handed. And I say to him and I say to you that I considered him and do consider him a friend of mine and that I think he has done a good job as the Chief Executive of his State.

At the same time, I have no hesitation in saying certain things in the presence of Alben Barkley. You are having a primary campaign for the choice of the Democratic candidate for the United States Senate. Both candidates are men of ability. Both are representative Kentuckians.

I want to make it definite and clear to you that I am not interfering in any shape, manner or form in the primary campaign in Kentucky. I do not desire to influence you. You have the absolute right to vote for any candidate in accordance with the dictates of your conscience. No outside source ought to drag you down.

Says Leaders Important

It is a privilege to have a clear right to tell you certain facts relating to the National Government and National problems which I believe by the people of Kentucky have a vital part to play in these facts and problems. As one of the great States of the Nation, Kentucky is interested in National affairs and is therefore entitled to know every single detail of National affairs. At this stage of war and domestic issues, leadership is important to the people of the whole country as well as to the people of each State.

We in this country operate intelligently through what we call the party system. We believe that party responsibility eliminates a large part of the confusion which would result from a complete lack of party leadership. That leadership is necessary not only in the executive branch of the Federal Government but in the two houses of the Congress of the Federal Government.

calls Barkley Liberal

In the Upper House, the Senate the leadership of the majority party has been entrusted to Senator Barkley, the senior Senator from Kentucky. I do not need to tell you of his own experience in all of our National problems. By virtue of that experience and of ability and seniority, he serves on major committees which deal with major legislation, and in addition to this speaks the voice of the majority leader.

His outlook on affairs of Government is a liberal outlook. Herein lies a major part in shaping not only the legislation but the actual policies of these past six years.

I have no doubt that Governor Chandler would make a good Senator from Kentucky—but I think he would be the first to acknowledge that as a very young member of the Senate, it would take him many, many years to match the National knowledge, the experience and the acknowledged leadership in the affairs of our Nation that son of Kentucky of whom the whole Nation is proud, Alben Barkley.

A new interpretation of the straw hat was the worn by Myrtle Lay at the wedding of Basil Rathbone's son. Medium-brimmed, the straw hat was completely covered with gold leaf and sported a black veil which tied under the chin.

Jeanette MacDonald, who has just returned from New York to start work in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Sweethearts," looks very chic in an over-the-ear, long-sleeved, white, long-sleeved jacket is fashioned of yellow flannel with scalloped edges and hipline around hipline down the front, and is worn with a grey flannel skirt, with box pleats tucked to just below hipline. With the jacket, Miss MacDonald wears a soft, brown silk scarf with white polka dots. Her hat is of yellow tulle, featuring a wide brim and high, shirred crown. Her shoes are black with a band of the scarf material. Shoes and gloves are of brown suede.

Women of every station take an active part in affairs of Sweden, according to Mrs. J. Borden Harrison, who has returned from her duties in Oslo as our Minister for a visit in the United States. She is the second woman to hold office as minister of our country. In Sweden take an interest in the working woman help with the money, earning by knitting and doing several of the other home arts and industries. Wealthier women take an interest in the schools, the commission on home work, the co-operatives and the political life of the country. Although there is only one woman in the Storting, or Parliament, a number are alternates who pinch hit for the regular members when absent. Mrs. Harrison herself, who is formally addressed as "Madame Minister," learned to knit and do ever so many other kinds of handwork. She has recently prepared to report on the handicraft industry of Norway for the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Women outnumber men in two out of sixteen major professions occupations. These are social, religious and welfare work, and nursing. In the last twenty years they have gained considerably on the men in these fields.

Sadie Waters, popular Morehead College graduate, who was wed two weeks ago to Howard Henderson, the Frankfort correspondent for the Louisville Courier-Journal, owes her wedding to Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

When President Roosevelt was coming through Kentucky last Friday he got a big laugh at the story of Mrs. Roosevelt in the part of Dan Cupid.

The story was told to him by Mrs. Henderson who rode the Presidential Special with her husband.

It started when Mrs. Roosevelt delivered a speech last winter in dedicating a new NPA school at Jackson, Breathitt County.

Mrs. Henderson told the President that she was teaching in Jackson when Mrs. Roosevelt came there to speak. Howard Henderson went to Jackson to "cover" the address, and met his future wife. From that acquaintance a friendship developed, and it ripened into love. So, Mrs. Henderson said to President Roosevelt.

"If your wife had not come to Jackson to make that speech, Howard would not have come to Jackson and met me, and I would not now be Mrs. Henderson. So Mrs. Roosevelt really is a Dan Cupid."

The President seemed to enjoy the story almost as much as he did the hundreds of reports brought to him that Senator Barkley was ahead by 2 to 1 in the State.

WATCH OUT BOBBY!

YOU'RE IN A BAD PLACE

Among the new employees at the Rowan County News, is Bobby Hogge. Does young Mr. Hogge take plenty of ribbing from the rest of the force, all of whom are allied on the side of Senator Barkley. Bobby holds out for Chandler, however, and is pretty good at defending himself.

ing his candidate, even though he has not quite reached the voting age. It was understood when Bobby started working at the News office that he could maintain his staunch stand for Chandler even though he had a Barkley stronghold.

Even though we disagree with Attorney Lester Hogge and Mrs. Hogge in this political campaign, we will have admitted that they have a bright bunch of youngsters.

LITTLE JACK HORNER—

AND THE COLLEGE PRESIDENT

Once more Little Jack Horner otherwise known as Governor A. B. D'Happy Chandler appeared on the scene at Morehead, in a monster demonstration of the power of the state administration. Governor Chandler was again appearing in the role of Candidate Chandler. There was one difference, however, when he appeared here three years ago he was Candidate Chandler, with a list of promises to be filled.

On this appearance he is in the role of Candidate Governor Chandler with a list of promises made and broken.

Be that as it may, Candidate Chandler, the Little Jack Horner of Kentucky politics, brought with him a big gun. For the edification of the dear people who had been so easily influenced three years ago, Little Jack stuck in his thumb and pulled out a plum and said what a great Governor am I.

He admitted it Dan Talbot told him the state employees admit it. Therefore it must be true. For he it from us to deride the Governor. We have been "admirers and supporters of him to the last degree. We believe that during the first two years of his administration he was a good governor, and gave promise of being one of the best.

have been made and the promises which have been broken. They know that the highway employees are being assessed by "voluntary contributions." They know that the crop of weed cutters has grown to such an extent that instead of being a weed cutter for each weed, they now have weedcutters so thick as to make travel dangerous. They now have weed cutters at least two to a weed. As one Frenchman put it they had to sow weed seeds in the early spring to prepare for the crop of weed cutters.

So Happy Little Jack stuck in his thumb and pulled out a plum. There is certainly nothing retiring about the Governor, that is putting it mildly.

Incidentally prominent among those in attendance at the big show was the Republican president of the Morehead State Teachers College, who has promised to deliver Rowan County into the hands of the enemy, in exchange for his job, so rumor has it, well founded rumor, if appearances have anything to say.

AND JUDGE RILEY

WAS THE FIRST WE SAW

Wherever you go you meet someone from Morehead. At Latonia Friday out of a crowd of nearly 100,000 people, Judge J. W. Riley was one of the first people we saw.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN ARE

PLEASANT AT LATONIA

The Roosevelt-Barkley meeting at Latonia should certainly be encouraging judging by the number of county chairmen in attendance. There were 120 county chairmen, one from each county. In the space reserved for them well over 1000 people were crowded. A springing few of them even wore Chandler buttons.

Over a thousand county chairmen should carry an election. A CAR—A DRIVER AND GAS WHO PAYS? Mrs. A. B. Chandler and Mrs. Arbery, state chairwoman for the Governor, came here Monday to appear at a woman's rally. When the rally was over a sleek limousine pulled up in front of the courthouse to pick them up. The car was purchased with taxpayers money, its tank filled with gas bought with the taxpayers money, it bore a license tag that was paid by a highway patrolman paid by taxpayers money.

We wouldn't mind doing a lot of campaigning ourselves if we could do it at the expense of the taxpayers of Kentucky.

some aid comes to our assistance. Therefore, when a child is absent for any cause except illness (the teacher should declare his a truant and he will be reported).

Last year many children were out of school to help take care of the crops. It cannot be allowed this year as the law is going to be strictly enforced. The parents will have to make arrangements to have the children help nights and mornings in order to go to school. Under no circumstances must they be kept out of school except illness. If the parents will only cooperate in this matter starting the year off right, there will be less trouble for parents, teachers and administrators.

Parents are to read the laws governing the part of the parents in attendance given in this paper.

School Attendance Laws Discussed

Taken From Kentucky Common School Laws

The following laws concerning compulsory attendance are given in order to acquaint the parents with the laws as they are set out. These apply only to parents. Responsibility of Parents: Age Limits For Compulsory Attendance. Each parent or guardian, or other person residing in the Commonwealth of Kentucky and having in custody or charge any child between the ages of seven and sixteen, not exempt under the provisions of this act, shall be required to send such child to a regular public day school for the full term for which the public school of the district in which the child resides shall be in session, or to the public school for which the board of education of the district makes provision for the child to attend, except as herein after provided; provided that a child's age shall be interpreted as being between seven and sixteen whenever the child has reached his seventh birthday and until he has passed his sixteenth birthday and provided further that any parent or guardian who elects to send to school a child between the ages shall be required to keep the child in regular attendance. (1934, c. 65, p. 277).

Sec. 434-29. Ky. Stat. Notice of Violation by Parent, Guardian, or Custodian of Child. Any parent, guardian, or custodian, who has charge or control of a child between the ages aforesaid and who willfully fails to comply with the foregoing requirements shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not to exceed ten dollars ($10) and costs for the first offense, and not to exceed twenty dollars ($20) and costs for each subsequent offense; but the court trying the case may, in its discretion, suspend enforcement of the punishment, if the child be immediately placed in attendance at a school as aforesaid, and may finally remit the same if such attendance has continued regularly for the full school term. School attendance may be proved by an attested certificate of the principal or teacher in charge of the school. (1934, c. 65, p. 280).

Isn't this the real problem of Beer — and almost its only problem?

THESE ARE people, of course, who steadfastly and sincerely believe beer to be intoxicating, or its use sinful, harmful, or a first step toward use of "hard liquor."

Just as sincerely we hold that the weight of the evidence is overwhelmingly against them... that beer is a mild, wholesome food beverage... and that "there is nothing more promising to combat the evil of too much alcohol than the opportunity of drinking good beer."

No... it is not in beer itself, we believe, that its gravest problem lies, but in those conditions, undesirable to us all, which sometimes surround its sale.

How should that problem be handled... by brewers, by retailers, by consumers, and by the public authorities? On its handling, we believe, depends the ultimate success or failure of the art and science of brewing with all its manifold contributions to human pleasure and happiness and to the farm and industrial welfare of this country.

It is that belief, a short time ago the Brewers Foundation was organized... to align the brewing industry with forces working for the public good in this country.

Our underlying motive... is to perpetuate and promote our industry... is of course obvious. But equally obvious, we hope, is the fact that our interests coincide with the public interest.

Important progress has been made. Brewermen of the Foundation already represent nearly half the production of beer and ale in the United States; and these members are pledged, individually and collectively, to the Brewers Code, one significant clause of which is as follows:

"We pledge our support to the duly constituted authorities for the elimination of anti-social conditions which may surround the sale of beer to the consumer."

Being practical men, we promise no miracles. We cannot immediately or effectively wipe out the quarter-million vintners whose beer is sold (nor, to be fair, have legal authority in many cases to do so). Nor can we, immediately, bring about full compliance with the law among all retailers, nor honest enforcement by all authorities.

But a beginning has been made... and we do promise that you will see results from it.

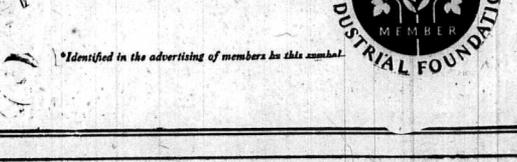

How far we can go, and how soon, depends very much on ourselves... but partly also on you.

Public opinion, once aroused, can operate to bring about honest enforcement of existing laws. Restriction of your patronage only to legal, respectable retail outlets can and will operate to raise retailing standards. Public preference for the products of Foundation members* will bear witness of your approval both to members and to cooperating retailers; and will encourage them to renewed efforts.

This is, therefore, at once a statement of our objectives and an appeal for your support, without which we must fall short of our high hopes. We urgently invite your full and sympathetic cooperation.
