

ALL ABOUT TWO-FIFTY.

Cause of the Notorious Rowan County, Ky., Feud.

LANCASTER, Wis., July 19.—W. M. Ramey and his son Henry, of Rowan county, Kentucky, are here. They are two of the parties involved in the Tolliner-Martin feud, and are the guests of J. J. McKenzie, of this place, to whom Ramey is cousin. Mr. McKenzie says that the feud which led up to the bloody climax published in these dispatches a short time ago, is of five years' standing and is a personal and not a political fight. It started on an election bet in which a $2.50 hat was the stake. Some little trouble arose over the bet, which finally led to a fight in which one man was killed. Jealousy and revenge has worked the rest, and has made Rowan county a place unfit for the habitation of peaceable men.
