THIS WEEK IN WASHINGTON

The Treasury officials are working on a plan for broadening the income tax base, as proposed by Senator Bob La Follette of Wisconsin and others.

The high court decided last Spring that it was constitutional for the Federal Government to tax the incomes of certain public "utilities" and their employees.

The principle that states and their administration agencies or instrumentalities cannot be taxed by the Federal government, and that they in turn may not levy taxes on Federal instrumentalities, was laid down by the Supreme Court when John Marshall was Chief Justice.

Under that ancient ruling, the United States could not tax state bonds and the states could not tax Federal bonds.

Non-Taxable Office Holders That, however, was 75 years before the Constitution was amended to permit the Federal government to levy a tax on incomes from whatever source derived.

Supreme Court has never been called upon to determine whether that permits the taxation of state officers or not.

It has been estimated that more than two million state, county and municipal office-holders who do not would be required to pay Federal income taxes.

THE MEXICAN SITUATION These days provisions among the matters which are being put to shape for discussion with the United States are the returns from his Pacific vacation cruise. Another matter which is pressing for Presidential attention and on which there have been many radio-telephone conversations between Washington and the cruiser Houston, is our relations with Mexico.

Government Buys Surpluses Many Washington offices are lighted at night these days, as hundreds of clerks work out plans for removing agricultural and industrial surpluses from the market by having the Federal government buy them up and distribute them to people in need.

The WPA administrator defends the theory as justifiable even if it results in higher costs for the general public. He reports that signs of greater employment in private enterprise. But he announced a few days ago, a new work-relief program calculated to add 200,000 workers to the WPA payrolls in the south.

TODAY and TOMORROW

THE ONE-STEP SOLO FLIGHT OF YOUNG DOUGLAS CURRIAN FROM NEW YORK TO DUBLIN IS THE MOST SPECTACULAR FEAT IN FLYING SINCE LINDBERGH FLEW ALONE TO PARIS IN 1927.

Young Currian's exploit completely overshadowed the world flight of Howard Hughes. That was a magnificent team work of plane builders, engineers and navigators, but Douglas Currian did it trick single-handed. He serviced his own plane—in fact he had built the engine, almost all of parts of the two discarded engines.

To me his flight is an impressive demonstration that the qualities of ingenuity, reason, daring, initiative and courage which built this nation, still live in the youth of America.

Next spring the World's Fair will complete for the interest of travelers from all the world; one of the New York World's Fair. The present outlook will attend one exposition or both. The motor, rail and bus travel over the highways leading from Coast to Coast will be heavier in the Summer of 1939 than ever before.

So will the congestion on the roads leading to the great metropolitan cities of our Atlantic and Pacific coasts. There will be more people on the road looking for food and lodging than there ever have been for economic recovery.

One certain effect of this enormous increase in travel is that more money will pass from hand to hand, and move faster, than in any previous recent year. And that spells prosperity. The World's Fair of 1939 ought to give a great impetus to economic recovery.

The New York World's Fair 1939 has for its slogan "The World of Tomorrow." I doubt whether it will disclose the world as it will be 30 or 40 years from now, though it will indicate some of the directions in which the world is moving.

I tried to list some of the things that make the world of today which were unknown when I attended my first World's Fair at Philadelphia, a little boy holding my father's hand, in 1876. There were no electric light, no telephones, no movies, no automobiles, not even bicycles, no airplanes, no typesetting machines, no steel ships, no air-brakes, no kodaks, no steam turbines, no rayon, no photographs, no tractors, not even safety razors in that beggarly world of my childhood. Celluloid was a novelty, kerosene lamps had not yet completely displaced whale-oil and candles, woodpulp paper was just coming into use and half-tone pictures had not been invented. Anybody who had tried to fore-view the world from the point of view of 1876 and had described it as it is now would have been called crazy.

GUESSES The Future Any guesses about the physical changes in the world in the next forty years and the social and economic changes which will flow from them is more likely to be wrong than right.

The world of tomorrow will be a more complete electrified world, a better refrigerated world and a world in which chemistry will play a larger part than in the world of today. We will produce electricity at much less cost and use it more efficiently and wisely than we do now.

By 1950 we will be getting our domestic water supplies on both coasts directly from the ocean, and extracting a large part of our minerals and chemicals from the sea. Water which we will drink will be in the air at 100 and 300 miles an hour, five miles above the highest clouds.

BEAUTY Standards of one thing I am sure, the world of tomorrow will be a more ingenuously, reason-filled world than the one we live in now. The people themselves will be more beautiful, because they will be healthier. Their clothes, their homes inside and out, and their movements will be far more pleasing to look at. Standards of aesthetic taste will be universally higher.

It will be a gayier world. There will be more and better entertainment and amusements of all kinds, in which an increasing number of the people will take part. There will be more and better music, dancing, play and sports for everybody. The theatre and the movies will be better.

And it will be a better educated world in the arts and sciences of living, if not in intelligence. Man will be better, courter, more prevalent it will be a kinder and more tolerant world, inspired by higher spiritual purposes and aspirations.

I have already mentioned in this column one of two women who are expert blacksmiths and my attention has recently been called to another who should be included in this old profession. Mrs. Sarahann Higgins Burr, sixty-five years old, makes miniature horseshoes for decorative purposes, a taste that is an outgrowth, perhaps of her work in a munitions plant during the war.

"The truth is, Mr. Vance?" the woman said, "he has never been examined." Then she asked quickly: "What do you think it is?"

"I wouldn't dare to venture an opinion, don't you know, an endocrine insufficiency somewhere—an inadequacy of some internal secretion, a definite and protracted disturbance. I think you should have your sex checked up. It may be something that can be remedied."

"When we reached the drawing room we found all four of its occupants anxious and alert."

"The woman shook her head. "A blood sugar?" proceeded Vance.

"I have then went to the door and inspected it briefly."

"Well, yes. But it won't help much. I propose that first we ask one or two questions of your own mind."

"The woman took the slip of paper folded it, and put it in one of the large pockets of her skirt."

"He went across the room and into the bathroom. This room too was brightly lit. He glanced at the electrical control panel hanging from the electric fixture and with his hand reached the weight of the painted glass cylinder."

"I have no favorite perfume," she said. "I like the perfume of my own hair."

"And now," said Vance, "I think we'll return to the drawing room. And may you have a well-earned night's rest."

"The woman stared at him in blank astonishment, and I am sure that had he been in a court room, he would have been instantly to the judge with the usual incompetent and irrelevant and immaterial objection. However, he managed a comely smile and responded:

"What is your favorite perfume?" she asked.

"I think you're right, Mr. Vance," the woman said, going toward the door. "I'll get Madeline myself."

"He turned and watched it swing back and forth. He looked into the tub which stood on the wide rim of the washbowl and, setting it down again, exclaimed the washing machine and around the edges—He then bent over the washbowl."

"Naturally," answered the lawyer, "by the way, Fieel, is your secretary a blonde or brunette?"

"A few minutes later Kenting came rushing down the stairs. He stopped in the doorway, glaring at us with intelligent eyes."

"I don't know, I suppose you'd call her a brunette."

"Many thanks," said Vance curtly.

"She's not there!" he exclaimed in an awed voice. He took a deep breath. "I knocked on her door several times, but I got no answer. I tried the door, it was locked. So I went through Kaspar's room, into Madeline's. The lights are all on, but she isn't there."

"How do you figure that out?" he asked, pointing his cigarette to the pull-chain of the electric fixture overhead. It was still swinging back and forth like a pendulum.

"What is your favorite scent, Mr. Falloway?"

"The window—over the garden—was wide open and—and the ladder is standing against it."

"I am strange indeed what hobgoblins populate the brain of simple individuals. I am certain that the most suspicious person I ever knew was Nora Gavannah."

"I don't know, I suppose you'd call her a brunette."

"I don't know, I suppose you'd call her a brunette."

"I don't know, I suppose you'd call her a brunette."

"The hell you say! The hell you say!" he cried out in a high pitched voice. "That's some more of Kaspar's dirty work. He's playing a game to get money. I tell you I don't believe he was kidnapped at all."

"I don't know, I suppose you'd call her a brunette."

"I don't know, I suppose you'd call her a brunette."

Buys Million Books In five years, since she became chief buyer for the New York Public Library, Miss Eliza Mahones has bought more than a million books. She is one of the largest buyers of books in the world. After training at Harvard College she worked for ten years in a branch library where she learned the tastes of readers. Many of her yearly purchases she finds to be depleted hand shops, though she buys from most of the European countries and some of the Asiatic ones. Miss Mahones says that they are proud of the fact that they never turned down a masterpiece.

B. S. Wilson Dies At Ashland Home

(Continued From Page One) his extreme fidelity to his clients and to his duties in every capacity, as well as for his brilliant mind and high legal ability. He was more than once urged to make the race for Judge of the Supreme Court of Kentucky, and was offered some high appointive official positions, all of which he declined to continue in the private practice of law. A high tribute was paid to him by Hon. Stanley M. Reed, who is now Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court. When Colonel Wiley Woodson, Custodian of Alien Property for the United States, was describing the type of attorney that he needed in association with him in that position as "one who is incorruptible, has unimpeachable integrity and cannot be swayed by any influence or tempted by any bribe" Judge Reed said, "Bun Wilson is the man you want. He is the very sort that you have described." Later this appointment was offered to Mr. Wilson, but was not accepted.

Though Mr. Wilson has been in failing health for a year, he continued to go to his office until April of this year, and continued to transact much business from his sick room during the weeks that he was confined to his home.

Mr. Wilson's father, Dr. Jerry Wilson, was a well known and brilliant physician, who was called as a consultant in critical cases all along the C and O Railroad from Mt. Sterling, Kentucky, to Huntington, W. Va. His mother was noted for her benevolent character and was a gifted writer.

The family is one that has played an important part in the national history of Kentucky. The father, mother and seven children all having taught successfully in the public schools of the State. All of the brothers later took up other professions, two becoming lawyers, B. S. Wilson and Glenmore C. Wilson, one became a physician, Dr. B. Clefford Wilson and one Dr. Homer L. Wilson, a dentist.

The two sisters, Mrs. E. B. McGlone and Mrs. J. B. Peers, married prominent business men and moved from Kentucky in 1916 to Pine Bluff, Arkansas, where their husbands are associated in business.

The other sister, Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, became nationally known as the founder of Moonlight Schools, which originated in the mountains of Kentucky and later extended to the entire nation. She is called the Moonlight School Lady and has been recognized for her work to the nation by winning the Fictorial Review Award of $200.00 for the most outstanding contribution to humanity by an American woman. Also she has received the Ellis Flag Youth Medal and the Clara Barton Medal for her work. She is now Director of the National Literacy Crusade with headquarters in Washington and during President Hoover's administration she was appointed Chairman of the National Commission on Literacy.

The funeral services were conducted at the home, 812 23rd street, Ashland by Dr. S. R. Curry, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, an old and intimate friend of the deceased, his own pastor, Rev. Joseph Faulconer being away on vacation. Dr. Curry told of Bun Wilson's contribution to the civic and religious life of Ashland, of his earnest work for the Y. M. C. A. for the establishment of a public library, of his work in the public schools of the city and for the church. Rev. Joseph Faulconer has since learned of the passing of Mr. Wilson, notified the Church officials that he will conduct a special memorial service for him in the church when he returns in September.

Interment was in the beautiful, old Ashland cemetery. A detachment of State Patrol led and brought up the rear of the funeral procession.

In addition to the large number of Ashland friends who attended the funeral there were the following relatives and friends from Morehead: Dr. Homer L. Wilson, Mrs. Everett Blair, Mrs. Mary E. Carey, Mr. Marvin Wilson, Mrs. C. E. Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Hogge, Misses Lottie and Norma Powers, Cluser Ramsey, and Senator S. M. Bradley. Others, from a distance were Judge J. D. Halley and son John D. Halley Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Allie Wilson of Olive Hill, Miss Ina Marion Wilson, Mrs. F. C. Button, Mrs. Morris Shanklin and Mrs. Nicholas Harber, Lexington, Mrs. Frank W. Button, Louisville, Mrs. Ida Button, Wilkes Barre, Pa., and Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, Washington, D. C.

THE SCHOOLS

SCHOOL LESSON

Written Each Week by B. H. KAZRE Pastor of The Baptist Church

SUBJECT: HANNAH: GODLY MOTHERHOOD. 1 Samuel 1: 1-24. Golden Text: "Her children arise up, and call her blessed." Prov. 31:28.

Elikaiah had two wives, one of which was the heroine of this story. Hannah. The other wife had borne children, but Hannah had never had a child. This was a matter of disgrace and shame to her, and she prayed that she might have a child. Eli, the priest, saw her lips moving constantly in prayer, and by her actions, thought she was drunk. He accused her, but Hannah told him, her heart's desire, and he turned in sympathy to her. He told her to ask God, and assured her that God would hear her prayers. Then came the glad day when little Samuel was born. Immediately she dedicated him to God, and as soon as he was old enough she placed him in the temple to serve the Lord under the great priest and teacher, Eli. She rejoiced in the Lord that she had a son to give to God. Samuel became the last of the Judges, that ruled Israel with great and righteous leadership. He it was who anointed Saul, the first but not the accepted king.

There is no greater example of godly motherhood than here. Samuel became a great man because of these things. He had a great mother, a great teacher, and a great God. With these God can make great men.

Godly motherhood is a thing that is passing with all the great and precious ideals of this day. The personal ambitions of women in public and professional and social life these days is drawing them away from the real and sacred calling of motherhood.

Can you imagine a woman of this age praying for a child? There are, perhaps, a few, but I dare say most of them are praying that they may not have any at all. Children are too much in the way of young mothers who want to shine in the world of social life, and to get the gain of professional life. Most men would like to become fathers, some, a fortune, do not care. But it is a known fact that there are thousands of women who lose their lives trying to save them. They wish to avoid the pain and inconvenience of having and rearing children, and none of us can but sympathize with them in this. But in saving themselves here they fail to perpetuate themselves in good sons and good daughters, as God has ordained.

But this is not the only phase of failing motherhood. A good woman who has not been privileged to have any children, said to me the other day: "I have no child of my own, I regret to say, but I feel responsible for the welfare and godliness of the children of other women." Many women who have children have not seen, as did Hannah, that to have a child for God is the greatest thing that just becoming the physical mother of a child. She not only prayed for a child, but soon she placed him where God would have his life, and continued to pray for him, until he became a man called of God.

Can you pay no higher tribute to my mother than to say that she tried to bring me, every day, into closer touch with God. That is godly motherhood. What might I have been without this godly mother? What might you have been? And what are so many helpless and erring boys and girls, because they have not had the care and prayers of a godly mother?
