Rev. Moore Sent To Church At Carrollton, Ky.

Rev. G. B. Traynor Of Newport Will Become Pastor Of Morehead Church

Although his congregation asked that he be returned for the sixth time to the church, Rev. G. B. Traynor, in session last week, followed its usual procedure in assuming the local pastor H. L. Moore to another church.

Rev. Moore will go to Carrollton where Rev. G. B. Traynor who has been pastor of the Methodist Church in Winchester, at the office of the Supervisor of the Cumberland National Forest for the construction of a 25-foot steel beam bridge across Critch Creek near Elliottville.

The erection of the span will be a part of the construction of the Clark Mt. East Truck Trail which runs from the Morehead-Frenchburg road near the Lee Clay Products mine to Ky. Route No. 32 near Elliottville.

Heavy masonry abutments will support the steel beam to be used. Construction of the bridge is expected to be started some time during September. The work is being done by the CCC camp at Korburn.

Three bridges have been completed on the Morehead to Frenchburg road and the fourth, which spans Lackey River, is now near completion. The small amount of falsework which was washed out during the flood of July has been replaced with a minimum cost, and weather permitting, erection of the steel will be started on Sept. 6.

FRIDAY IS DEADLINE FOR REGISTRATION

KIDNAP MURDER Case

by S.S. Van Dine

"Well, there was monograms on damn-near everything else he had in his pockets. According to the boys at the local station, he was either the Kaspar Kenting we're looking for, or he wasn't nobody!"

Siskin was dismissed and ten minutes later Heath followed when we were alone Markham asked:

"How did you know Kaspar-Kenting was dead when I spoke to you on the stairway yesterday morning?"

"You flatter me," said Vance. "I didn't really know. I merely surmised it—basin' my conclusion on the indications."

"So that's your mood," snorted Markham hopefully. "I'm telling you, you outrageous foe, that this is a damned serious situation—what happened to Fieel tonight ought to prove that."

"I know only too well Markham, how serious the situation is," he said in a grave and curious subdued voice. "But there's really nothing we can do. We must wait—please believe me. Our hands and feet are tied. The most serious part of the whole affair is that this is not a kidnapping case at all, in the conventional sense. It goes deeper than that. It's cold-blooded, diabolical murder. But I can't quite see my way yet to proving it. I'm far more worried than you, Markham. The whole thing is unspeakably horrible. There are subtle and abnormal elements mixed up in the situation. It's an abominable affair, but as we sit here tonight, I want to tell you that I don't know—don't know! I'm afraid I make a move until we learn more."

"I shall never forget the following day. It will ever remain in my memory as one of the great horrors of my life."

"The day began conventionally enough."

"I think we'll take a spin down Markham's office," Van Vance said. "There's nothing to do here, and there may be some news which Markham naively regards as too trivial to telephone me about."

"We arrived at Markham's office a few minutes before ten o'clock."

"Glad you came, Vance," was Markham's greeting.

"Ah! Vance sat down lazily. "Any tidin's, glad or otherwise?"

"Well," said Markham in a hard practical voice, "Keynon Kenting was taken to the uptown morgue this morning and he identified his brother's body beyond a doubt. And I saw no need to put any other members of the family through the harrowing experience."

"Mrs. Kenting's room, as well as the window-sill and the ladder, was gone over thoroughly for fingerprints."

"And none was found, of course, except the Sergeant's and mine?"

"Vance's right," conceded Markham. "The person, or persons, must have worn gloves."

"Assum'n' there was a person—or persons."

"All right, all right," Markham was beginning to be annoyed. "You're so damned cryptic about everything and so reticent that I have no way of knowing what prompted that last remark of yours."

"Personally, I'd say you wouldn't find them till you have located the car in which Mrs. Kenting was probably driven away last night."

"What do you mean—what car?" demanded Markham.

"I haven't the slightest idea," said Vance laconically. "But I hardly think the lady walked out of our sight."

"And by the by, Markham, speakin' of cars, what enormous array of information did you marshal about the green coupe that his energetic Sergeant found so conveniently waiting for him in the traverse?"

"Doubtless stolen, eh, what?"

"Yes, Vance, that's just it. Belongs to a perfectly respectable spinster on upper West End Avenue."

"What about Abe, the buddy of the chauffeur who drove us home last night? I suppose Heath or Street put the poor devil through the requisite torture?"

"You read too many trashy books, Vance," Markham was indignant. "Heath talked to the driver of the number one cab at Headquarters within an hour of the time he left here last night. He merely corroborated what our chauffeur told us—namely, that he dropped the two men who came out of the trans-om entrance of the Lexington Avenue subway."

"Well, your information seems to be typically thorough and typically

BIOGRAPHY

Fernand Gravet

Fernand Gravet, the Continental star, knew many nationalities before he ever attained his notoriety. He was born on Christmas morning of 1903 in Belgium, educated in England, toured as an actor in Germany, Roumania and many Central European nations, and then came to France as his permanent residence. His first American picture was "The King and the Chorus." Directed and produced for Warner Bros. by Mervyn LeRoy, to whom he is under personal contract. Then followed "Fools For Scandal" and "The Great Waltz," the latter released by M-G-M, with Luise Rainer as Gravet's co-star.

Both Gravet's parents were of the theatrical world. His father, the late Leopold G. Martens, of French descent, was a noted European manager and producer. His mother, Bernadette Gravet Martens, of Belgian blood, was a prominent character actress.

During the war, his family moved to England, where Fernand attended St. Paul's school. Later, he went to the stage, playing minor roles.

Because of his Belgian citizenship, he was summoned to Belgium to serve the required two years in the army. He returned then to France, touring through the Central European nations and to Egypt and South America during his professional career, he has appeared in every European nation except England and Russia.

Coincidence marked his debut in the States. His father, who meant to send him to the States for an appearance in "Romance," with Oona Moore, it was in a revival of "The King and the Chorus" that Fernand was introduced to Paris. An almost immediate success, he appeared in 29 plays, playing only light musical comedies to date.

It was during these years that he first courted and married the golden-haired Parisian star, Bernadette Martens. He was 24 and she 20. For the following three years, he was co-starred on the Paris stage.

The sudden, dramatic advent of silent pictures revolutionized the careers of many actors, and Gravet was no exception. He had to wait for a year before he could secure a contract for his use for U.F.A.

Following this production, he landing lady became seriously ill, necessitating a delay of two months. Gravet's contract gave him the right to demand steady salary, but instead he offered to waive this in return for half his salary. His living expenses provided he could an assistant cameraman for one week and a film cutter or editor for the second month. He realized the future of the cinema, had determined to learn the business, and to look a fellow actor.

Gravet's first assignment was to trace the film from the set to the screen. His employers accepted his proposal and thus gained the experience he declares has since been invaluable to him.

Returning to Paris, he began a starring career that included 27 pictures and made him one of the Continent's most popular actors.

Hollywood sent many offers to Gravet but he declined them all, feeling there might be forgotten, emerged, never given a chance at an American picture. The offer of 1936 he met Mervyn LeRoy, then a Warner Bros. director preparing to become a producer and lead his own unit.

Mr. LeRoy insisted on the objection of Gravet's film promises, personally would direct each of Gravet's American films, and decided how and when to contract.

Business Guides

RECENTLY these two sentences appeared as part of an advertisement for a business opportunity: "Modern executives, careful study of all the facts involved."

What is the business? It requires time and money. It's not a "get rich quick" scheme. It's a business that requires a study of all the facts involved. It's a business that requires a study of all the facts involved. It's a business that requires a study of all the facts involved.

There are some things to be learned from a study of these sentences. First, it is not wise to make snap-judgment decisions in business. Next, remember that all business decisions are based on facts. It is not the man who has the most money, but the man who has the most facts, who will succeed. For as the mistakes made in business by men who "trust the morning and think it over."

Some men get the facts and reach correct conclusions, but yet fail to have their views accepted or their decisions carried out properly. Be guided by the thought in this section. At this point Mr. B. realized that although he was making good progress, he had been hampered because of a lack of knowledge in the "how to" part.

Whether speaking or writing you should be able to give yourself concise English. Many men have most of the qualities which make for success, yet are held back from their final goal by a lack of ability to make their thoughts and decisions clear to others.

By the aid of helium new records for deep-sea diving were set in July. This gas which enables airships to soar, also enables human beings to go deeper in the ocean than anyone has ever gone before.

The trick is to pump a mixture of helium and oxygen into the divers helmet while he is submerged. William Budder, Master Diver of the United States Navy, went down 401 feet from the U. S. Falcon and remained submerged at that depth for an hour, with no ill effects.

Off the coast of Portugal divers recovered nearly half of the 4 million dollars of gold which went down with the ship "Atlantis" a few years ago. The "Atlantis" carried two or three million in gold when she was torpedoed by a German submarine in 1915.

Along the Atlantic coast of the United States are wrecks of airplanes which carried gold, but which lie too deep to be reached by ordinary means. There is a million dollars or so in copper bars in the hull of the "Pantico" 300 feet deep at the bottom of Lake Huron.

And she will be right.

There's another thing about road maps that I resent, and that is that they're impossible to read while driving. Not that it does you any good to read road maps, but it does give you a sense of security—false, naturally—to trace a meaningless line across a state with a grimy thumb-nail.

Egg Production May Be Increased During Fall, Winter

Hints on Best Way To Secure Maximum Production Are Released

By Carl Wade

There is no reason why a heavy egg production cannot be had during the fall and winter months if the proper care is given.

The first place to start is with the poultry house. The house must be clean and free from all parasites and diseases. A house may be cleaned easily and inexpensively by using the following method. Sweep down the walls, roost perches, floors, and then use some concentrated lye (about 1 1/2 oz. to 10 gal. of scalding water) wash all parts of the house to be sure there is no trace of filth, or disease organisms. A cheap disinfectant proper to use in the next step is crank case oil, placed on the roost perches, in nests and where ever parasites may harbor.

If the house has large cracks in the walls, doors off the hinges, window lights out, leaky roof, repair them and make the house comfortable.

When the house is in proper condition, there may be some time spent with the pullets that are to be layers this fall. The pullets have been on range all summer and may not be of the proper laying if they were put in the laying house for some time.

Pullets should be placed on some laying mash with a portion feed so they will continue to grow and do so while laying.

Any type of a pullet will not lay some will breed themselves while the poultryman will board others. The young pullets should be culled and remove those inferior birds that are weak, underdeveloped and poor in body because the number of eggs laid by this type of a bird would not pay for the feed. Some have said "I feed my chickens all the corn they will eat and my hens are fat and I am not getting any eggs". This is true because the birds have been fed a fattening ration and not one they would produce on.

The best ration is one in which the proper ingredients are found and produced on the farm the stock is on.

The following will serve as a guide in building a ration.

Scratch feed, Cracked corn, 100 lbs. Wheat, 100 lbs.

Mash mixture, Ground corn, 100 Ground wheat 100, lbs. ground oats 100 lbs. Meat and bone scraps 75 lbs. Alfalfa meal 25 lbs. Total 400 pounds.

Cozy To Show Kidnapped

"It's a tough job to become another man over night," declares Director Alfred Werker, "But it's not until an actor steps into another man's personality that he gives a moving performance."

To Werker, who has been making films in Hollywood for 22 years, a big failure of screen acting is that "John Doakes in every picture. He may pose an outstanding personality of his own, but if he speaks the same, moves the same, and even smokes the same, regardless of whether he is a tramp or a states man, he is ruthlessly destroying the story."

Selected by Darryl F. Zanuck to direct 20th Century-Fox's production of Robert Louis Stevenson's "Kidnapped," opening Wednesday at the Cozy Theatre, Werker didn't hesitate to hold up shooting on the set to help the actors analyze their characters and get into the mood of the period.

"I don't care whether an actor repeats his dialogue letter perfect," he says, "I don't care how many times he takes to walk across a room. I can even forgive him if he muffs his lines 25 times provided that he actually is living the part."

In Stevenson's "Kidnapped," every player from Warner Baxter and Freddie Bartholme down to the "bits" read the original story, and at least one amount of the times. We got together before a single foot of film was shot to study Stevenson's character. We wanted to think and feel as they thought and felt."

Frank Miller, Jr. Wins Tennis Tournament

Frank Miller, Jr., from Kentucky won the Singles Tournament with comparative ease at the Walter League Camp, Aycada, Mich. Day by day, new aspirants arrive at this exquisite camp on the lake front. In the final singles tournament, Frank, Jr. disposed of his opponents in short order, defeating Art Hanssen from St. Louis, Mo., #2; 6:0 and Victor Hilderer from Detroit 6:0; 6:0. In the semi-final he bested Chuck Barth from Cincinnati, Ohio 6:0; 6:0; and in the finals he defeated E. R. Jass from Milwaukee, Wis., by scores of 6:1, 6:0, 6:0. Frankie hasn't lost a set to anyone since his arrival at camp July 29.

In soft ball, Frankie has been coming thru with flying colors. He plays daily and fields his position with amazement to all.

THIS TAVERN OBSERVES THE LAWS

When you drink Beer in a tavern... choose your tavern

WHEN YOU restrict your patronage to legal, respectable retail outlets, you not only encourage those better outlets but you've made a start toward driving out the bad spots in your community.

And that is exactly the aim of the great body of honest retailers of beer who, along with the brewers, recognize that Beer's only problem is to remove the anti-social conditions that sometimes surround its sale.

Existing laws can curb these evils. Help us by demanding their strict enforcement! Sales to minors, or after legal hours... or use of a beer license as a screen, for selling illicit liquor or for operating an illicit resort... all these are violations of the law and should be stopped. Public opinion, once aroused, can see that such practices are stopped!
