

The FEUD at SINGLE SHOT

By Luke Short

"We have no money Dave. The two men we've got left haven't been paid regularly in a year." A sudden business caught her throat. "Never mind," Dave said quietly. "We've got the land and the water and the grass. Banks loan money, so we'll have cattle."

"The bank has loaned money, Dave," Mary said. "They won't loan us any more. A good slice of the paper is due in a few days, too. Her voice was suddenly bitter. "That's another present for you, Dave, from a loving sister."

"Stop it, Mary," Dave said softly. "I hate to hear you talk like that."

They fell into single file now as the road narrowed between two canyons and slanted steeply up-hill. He remembered the place. There were the small badlands that announced the deep gently sloping plateau—the Soidal Desert, spread, which the D Bar 7, his spread, was located.

He recognized each landmark. Mary was ahead of him and she spoke to her softly. "Don't worry, sis. The black days haven't come to the Turners yet. Not for—"

A spouting mushroom fire winked from the higher truck and Dave felt a searing splat on the top of his head that swept him off his horse into falling consciousness. Rosy's gun streaked up in coughing savage lanes of flame.

Mary was kneeling by Dave as Rosy fought his horse quiet and leapt off.

Rosy struck a match. In its light they could see a waxy smear of red on the top of Dave's head, the blood oozing out from under the thick black hair. Rosy put his ear to Dave's chest.

"Pumpkin like a locomotive," he announced cheerfully.

Mary was sobbing softly.

"It's all right, Miss Mary," Rosy said. "If they killed him, I reckon I'd just go hog wild."

Mary nodded. "So—so would I. There's a hump on up on the hill. I think I'm going to passed. He'll come to pretty quick."

Rosy scrambled up the steep canyon wall. On the rim he saw a sprawled, prone figure, resting face downward on the stick of a shotgun. Rosy struck a match. He was a thick-set man, dressed in soiled denim pants, greasy shirt and tattered vest.

He was unshaven and just where the stubble of beard ceased to grow on his neck, a thin stream of blood trickled. He was dead. Rosy led the match die and peered off into the night, listening.

A scraping horse gave him the clue he was waiting for and he walked over to a ground-hauled horse. He led the horse across the rim-neck, leading the man across the saddle and after walking south for a hundred yards found the artery which led down to the road.

Mary was waiting for his cue. Rosy struck a match, wondering if the man would turn out to be someone she knew. Mary peered at the man and Rosy led the flame die quickly.

"Is it one of them nesters?" he asked.

"I've never seen him before," Rosy shrugged. "Reckon you can lead this horse? I'll put Dave up in front of me and lead his horse. How far we got to go?"

"Three miles."

The Turner ranch lay in the sheltered side of a large draw with sloping grassy sides which served as a windbreak. Tall sycamores mushroomed up in the black night, hiding everything about the house but the two spacious and lighted windows.

No one greeted them as they dismounted. Rosy followed Mary into the house. They entered a broad, low-ceiled room, a huge fireplace at one end. Rosy day we've the man seated in a chair before the fire as he laid Dave on a Davenport.

"Well, Mary," the man drawled. "Rosy looked up. The speaker was young, perhaps thirty, with dark, coolly appraising face. He was dressed in whipcord breeches and shiny boots, slouched somewhat on his backbones in the easy chair.

"Oh, Ted," Mary said, a little catch of fear in her voice. "Some one shot Dave!"

"Rosy and I," the speaker said. "Excuse me, Mr. Rand, my husband, Ted Winters."

Winters nodded lazily. "Welcome, Rand."

"Howdy," Rosy said. He looked curiously at Mary.

"I wanted to surprise Dave, she said, flushing a little deeper. "He lounged out of his chair and came over beside Rosy, looking down at the unconscious figure on the davenport. Mary left for the kitchen.

"Some whipperwill on the dry-gulch," Rosy said. "This side of lay sticking out the weathered cracks. The corral were avary, some of their bars down.

They looked at the horses, perhaps a dozen in all. They were fat, but uncared for and shaggy.

"Which horse was Little Bo-Peep ridin'?" Dave asked.

"That black with a white stockin'." Dave looked for the brand.

The American housewife will have to change her attitude toward household workers in order to have mutual harmony, according to Miss George T. Stone, chairman of the committee on household employment of the National Board of Domestic Workers.

The so-called servant problem exists, she says, because of relationships between employer and employe in American homes have been based on the Golden Rule.

Therefore, there must be an organization of domestic workers. Recently the National Committee of Household Workers was organized in Cincinnati by a member of the Y. W. C. A. who for the past two summers has been a student at the Bryn Mawr Summer School for Women Workers. Terms such as "hired girls," maids, and "servants" are passing, Mrs. Scott emphasizes. You must refer to your men and women who do the household work as "household employes."

Logmen Wanted In Timber Area

The recent hurricane in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Vermont and Southern Maine has caused inestimable damage to extensive timbered areas in these states. No accurate figures as to timber damage have yet been ascertained. Rough estimates place the loss at several billion-board feet of merchantable timber.

Salvaging damaged timber and reducing the high fire hazard is being directed by the United States Forest Service. Forest Supervisor R. F. Hemmingway of the Cumberland National Forest, Winchester, Kentucky, received the following announcement today: "As a result of the recent hurricane in New England, there are large amounts of blowdown whitepine, spruce and hardwood timber which must be salvaged by logmen and reliable loggers or bolts and delivered to specified points for storage. There is a definite need for experienced woodmen and competent logging contractors. If reliable contractors are interested, suitable credit facilities if necessary can be arranged through the Disaster Loan Corporation for the United States Government. Information as to location of projects, contract prices for the work, points of delivery and credit facilities can be secured by addressing U. S. Forest Service, 209 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

THE FARM AND HOME

Manure spread on bare land soon loses much of its nitrogen, which is carried through the atmosphere by the heavy rain. The best practice is to disk or plow under the manure soon after it is spread, unless there is some kind of growth on the land.

Apples, potatoes and some other vegetables may be stored in barrels set in the ground. The barrel should be placed only in a well-drained location. Cinders or crushed rock beneath the barrel improves drainage. Cover with a sack of leaves or litter and boards.

In wiring the house, a light at the head of the attic stairs and at the foot of the basement stairs will find of great convenience. Lights also should be provided for all bins and storage rooms in the basement.

Chance is a rich source of lime, being a concentrated form of milk, and should be used freely for the well-being of teeth and bones. It also furnishes calcium and body building materials. It can be used in salads, sandwiches, scalloped dishes and many other attractive ways.

In painting the kitchen, a semi-gloss finish is preferable to a glossy surface because the latter is hard to keep clean. Use a flat finish water-proof varnish makes a flat finish easier to clean. Only paint and enamel of good quality are satisfactory.

It is good business to set only clean eggs. A clean cloth moistened with vinegar will remove small dirt spots. Very dirty eggs should be used at home, or washed in clean, cool water before taking to town. Dry water before packing.

"THIS is just another laugh on a story that you have heard lots of times. A guy went into an excellent restaurant in San Francisco—no ordered two dozen oysters."

"No luck yet."

He seemed to be awful hungry, and he ate them up without any bread or potatoes or anything to go with them. Then he ordered two dozen more, and he ate them too. "How's getting kinda blue under the eyes now, time, but he ordered one more dozen."

"After he had ate the last oyster, he felt awful sick. When the waiter gave him a bill, he tore it up and he went around then."

"No luck yet."

"Well, then you found it out? Well, he ate five dozen of them."

"Well, they are right fresh water."

Author of "How to Win Friends and Influence People" ZANE GREY

Zane Grey battled his way up from discouragement and poverty to the position of being one of the most widely read novelists on this planet.

Editors have frequently paid Zane Grey $75,000 for only the magazine rights to a story even before the story was written yet he could not sell his first few books for seventy five cents.

So, determined to become a writer, he abandoned his profession and moved to Lackawanna, where he could live economically and hunt and fish while he was learning to write.

One day when he was in New York, trying to sell a story, he met Colonel Buffalo Jones. Colonel Jones wanted someone with a flair for the hunt to go out west with him and write about the trip.

After spending six months among the cowboys and wild horses of the west, he came home and wrote a novel entitled "The Last of the Plainsmen."
