Maxey Charged With Murder Of Wife

Morehead Man Allegedly Shot 7 Months Bride; Restaurant Operator Hit

A charge of willful murder has been lodged in Rowan County Court against Herman Maxey, charged with slaying his wife, a bride of less than 7 months in a restaurant on Railroad Street Thursday.

According to several eye-witnesses as Maxey walked into the restaurant operated by Howard Henshaw, brandishing a gun. His wife, sitting at a table, started to run to the back near the left shoulder blade and emerged at her throat. She died four hours later, a short time after she had been taken to the St. Joseph Hospital at Lexington.

Henshaw, sitting behind a curtain which divided the kitchen from the restaurant from the kitchen, was hit by two stray bullets, one striking him in the head by a kick of the gun and the other in the left ankle. It is believed that these bullets glanced off a counter or the floor for neither carbe out. His condition is not serious although the head injury might have been fatal had the bullet not already spent most of its power.

After being shot Mrs. Maxey, who was formerly Maxine Carpenter, daughter of Bill Carpenter of Indiana, walked five blocks to a doctor's office. She received treatment in the office of Dr. H. L. Nickell before she was taken to Lexington. Funeral services were conducted Sunday from the Clearfield church with burial there.

Maxey made no comment on the charges that he shot his wife. According to Sheriff Ben McBrayer he did declare that he shot Henshaw accidentally.

Breck Sluggish In Beating Grayson Five By 22 To 18

Tatum Leads Attack, Eagles Need More Conditioning Coach Laughlin Says

Paced by Tatum, the Breckinridge Training School basketball team opened its season by scoring a 22-18 victory over Prechard High of Grayson last week.

Breck did not show the class expected and although the Eagles boasted plenty of height their ball handling was poor. Grayson played a waiting game, seldom shooting unless they were in good scoring position.

Pointing out the many weaknesses in the Grayson match Coach Bobby Laughlin started intensive drills Monday in preparation for the harder part of the Morehead schedule that follows. Breck is scheduled to meet most of Kentucky's outstanding high school fives this season. "The boys will have to improve a great deal," was Laughlin's comment today.

Kentucky Firebrick Company Had Its Beginning When Mountain Merchants Deeded Land To Pay Off Indebtedness To Portsmouth Wholesaler

It was an ill wind which did blow real good to Rowan County and the surrounding counties when 38 years ago certain merchants in this vicinity could not pay the bills they owed to a Wholesale Dry Goods company in Portsmouth, Ohio.

In the year of 1900 and prior thereto, a Mr. W. A. Connelly conducted a wholesale dry goods business in Portsmouth, Ohio. Many of his customers were located in the mountains of Eastern Kentucky. Finding themselves deeply indebted to the wholesaler they offered to settle their accounts by deeding lands to certain Eastern Kentucky large average of 100 acres to acquire to Mr. Connelly's settlements of these accounts.

Mr. Connelly had heard that there might be a big oil field in this area of this property and after prospecting proved this to be a fact.

Mr. L. P. Haldeman, a nephew of Mr. Connelly, decided late in 1902 to incorporate a company. On September 1, 1903, he incorporated several other men from Louisville incorporated the Louisville and Portsmouth Fire Brick Company.

Wiggers Lead Eagles To Win Over Holbrook

Club Starts Slowly But Comes From Behind To Win Without Exertion

It looked for five minutes at Morehead, Ohio, Monday night, as if Alfred Holbrook was to score a stunning basketball upset over Morehead's Eagles. The Oheans held a 9-0 lead at that point when Ellis Johnson sent Wiggers, 6 foot 11 inch center from Brooklyn, N. Y. into the fray and Big John Murray, 6 foot 10 inch center, stepped in to start the Morehead offensive. From then on the Eagles had clear sailing and jagged a 17-9 halftime lead.

The final score, with Morehead using substitutes about half the time, was 42-21.

Charles Higginbottom and Len Stinner, with eight and nine points respectively, ran Wiggers, who garnered 16 points for scoring honors. Roughly, with 11 points, led the Holbrook team.

Thievery Among Farmers To Be Stopped

Good roads and fast trucks constitute an added inducement to thieves to steal in the rural sections. Hundreds of dollars worth of farm property—tobacco, meat, grain, chickens, live stock, etc.—are stolen from the farmers of this section of the state, here and there.

Thieves work in organized gangs. So must the private citizens and law enforcement officers organize to fight back at the unscrupulous characters who persist in living off the fruits of other men's labor.

Thousands of farmers, in every section of the state, have banded together under the leadership of the Kentucky Farmers Home Journal, 73-year old farm paper, to organize a campaign against thievery from their farms. The Journal offers a standing reward of $25.00 for the apprehension and conviction of any thief stealing from a member. Each member is furnished with a metal "Thieves Beware" sign to post at the entrance of his farm, announcing the reward offer.

Marketing Card Being Given Rowan Farmers

Rowan County Tobacco farmers are receiving marketing cards for their 1938 tobacco crops at the County Agent's office. The farmers of the county will be permitted to sell a total of 600,000 pounds which is about 86 per cent of the tobacco these farmers sold in 1937 and considerably more than these farmers sold in 1935 or 1936.

About 25 per cent of the tobacco has been delivered to market but very little of this has been sold. Marketing cards for the tobacco growers growing their first crop this year have not been received but are expected in the county of which in the next few days. The cards assigned these farms are in addition to that allotted the old farms.

Farmers who have been raising tobacco every year and raising about the same average each year, are permitted to sell all their crop in most cases. Farmers who may have missed one or two years in the last three have quota some what less than their 1938 crop. The quota assigned these farms are in addition to that allotted the old farms.

Horton Holds What May Be World Record

Eagle Center Played 1620 Consecutive Minutes Without Being Out Of Linenup

What is believed to be a national record for consecutive minutes of playing on a college football team was set by John "Buck" (Iron Man) Horton, center and co-captain of the Morehead College Eagles who finished a brilliant college grid career on Armistice Day.

Horton, who comes from Mt. Sterling, never missed playing a good game, even in his Freshman year, at the Eagle school. In all the strapping 200 pound center played 1,620 consecutive minutes. Seven times he suffered a minor injury but he was always able to continue in the game. He was named all K.I.A.C. center for the second consecutive year.

Ellis Johnson, Morehead coach, believes that Horton is perhaps the greatest lineman that he has ever coached. The Morehead mentor predicts a bright future for the Central Kentucky star in professional football. Horton hopes to hook up with a good pro team next fall. He will graduate at Morehead in June.

The Eagles finished another brilliant season, marred however by a 14-0 loss to Murray and a score less tie against Eastern. Murray is the only club that has been able to take the Eagles since Johnson took over the coaching reins. Morehead scored a total of 270 points in 7 games, for more than any other team in the state who "bug" Wernoy of Williamson. (Continued On Page Three)

Johnson Releases Tentative Grid Schedule

Morehead College athletic director, Ellis Johnson said today that the Eagles will meet only two K.I.A.C. foes on the gridiron next year. Murray and Eastern will not appear on the tentative Morehead schedule released today.

Rural Schools Help In Christmas Seal Sale Campaign

The rural schools are lending a hand in selling Christmas Seals this year. Each year more and more people are realizing the meaning of Christmas Seals. This year each teacher is given enough seals for each child in his school to sell five. If all of the children sell five each, then this school is called a 100 per cent school and will be visited by some of the members of the Morehead Y.M.C.A. who will be presenting Christmas and will be presented with balloons. This will be in appreciation of the effort spent in raising the school's 100 per cent school. Mrs. Wilfred Waltz, Secretary explains that most every child himself some little pleasure to buy in the schools will be able to donate five cents worth of seals. The following schools have already obtained the seals and are hoping to be able to make a big sale: Craney, Razor, Ramey, Clanton, Alfrey, Pond Lick, Brunston, Clearfork, Rockfork, Clark, Holly, Moore, Farley, and Rosedale.

Perhaps A Blessing In Disguise

Editorially the News, in its issue of November 17, said: "The settlement of the Haldeman labor dispute is perhaps welcomed by the people of Rowan County more than any other thing which has happened here for several years. To the public it is not so much which side won in the courts as the fact that men will be going back to work and there exists about the Haldeman plant a greater sense of cooperation between officials and the men, including those who went on strike, than there has been since 1935."

Three weeks have passed since that was written and during that period the above statement is borne out by the general settling feeling at Haldeman. This week the News celebrates the settlement of the dispute with a special edition. Carried in this newspaper are advertisements from leading business men of Rowan County, wishing both the Kentucky Firebrick Company and its employees prosperity and happiness in the future. It is appropriate that this edition be printed a short time before Christmas.

This Christmas will be possibly the happiest that has been observed by employees of the Kentucky Firebrick Company for many years. The long suspense over the labor situation has been virtually eradicated. Perhaps, after all, the dispute has been a blessing in disguise. It has amplified the fact that the men need the Kentucky Firebrick Company and the Kentucky Firebrick Company needs the men. All of Rowan County rejoices.

Politics In Kentucky

Kentucky's politics become more muddled each passing week. Lying the important State races next year the administration and the anti-administration are already entrenching themselves for a battle that may overshadow in bitterness the Governor's fight of 1935 and the Senator's race this year.

Tom Underwood, editor of the Lexington Herald, predicts that next year's Democratic nomination for Governor will rest between Keen Johnson, the candidate of Governor Chandler, and John Young Brown, young and outspoken attorney of Lexington. However, there are those close to the anti-administration group that believe Lawrence Hagger, son of H. H. Hagger, the race would rest between two popular and combative of the Owensboro Messenger and Enquirer, will oppose John Peppers newspaper editor, both of whom have a great personal following.

There seems little doubt that the national Democratic chairman, Jim Farley, desires a compromise. Farley is interested in delivering Kentucky's delegation to the national convention. However, state politicians are most interested in political patronage and all that goes with it. A compromise appears far-fetched even though Kentucky's Congressional delegation would probably desire it, provided they had ample proof that the compromise would react favorably for them by securing support of the state administration in their own races.

Republicans hold little hope of victory in Kentucky next year, but do have expectations of electing a president in 1940. Like all Kentucky politics, the situation will get a lot of airing between now and spring.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Written Each Week By B. H. KAZEE, Pastor Of The Baptist Church

Subject: MODERN FORMS OF COVETOUSNESS. Exodus 20:17; Luke 12:13-21; 1 Tim. 6:9-10. Golden Text: "Thou shalt not covet."

Last week we studied the sin of lying. That sin is to be despised as one common to all humanity. But here is even a worse one, because it is so subtle and easily indulged in. That is the sin of covetousness. Not many people take the Tenth

New Testament - Mabel Carr
Waymond Traveler - Betty Banks

"What doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what will a man give in exchange for his soul?"

Covetousness spreads over every thing we want which we should not have, and which rightfully is another's. This includes another's husband, or wife, his or her property, life, position, talent, or what ever else is not ours by right of honest possession. And that which is gotten by us at the expense of God's will for us is the result of covetousness. That which is wanted in the same way, whether obtained or not, is still covetousness. "Be ware of covetousness," says the Master, "for a man's life consisteth not in the things which he possesseth."

Each size and shape has its particular place in the furnaces heretofore described and it has been said that a good brick maker is just as respected as any other type skilled mechanic—he truly is an artisan.

Main Part Important
There are three different types of clay in this vicinity (1) flint clay, which is very hard, (2) semi flint and (3) plastic clay. The Kentucky Fire Brick Company employ between 50 and 75 men in and around the mines. Each is an expert and most have had long years of experience. They know from this experience just what is the most desirable clay to dig and load. Like many of the craftsmen in the old world you will usually find a son learning the same trade as the father. It is not unusual to see many fathers leaving the mines at the end of a days task arm in arm with their sons. The balance of the employees which at peak times has numbered 200 and 250 are employed in the actual manufacture, such as clay grinding, mixing, shaping, burning and shipping.

Haldeman On Sports Map Of Kentucky

The Kentucky Fire Brick Company employees have long been known throughout Kentucky for their prowess in sports. Their baseball and basketball teams have always been out in front. Due to the fact that only a small percentage of the men on the rolls worked during 1938 these athletic and recreational activities were curbed but it can be assumed that with a resumption and with a greater zest than ever before. The Haldeman Community Band has been reorganized and hold weekly practice sessions.

This pageant is spiritually designed, a true and interesting every step of the way, and best of all leads a congregation to a great spirit of worship, and to the right celebration of the birth of the Christ Child. The departments of the Church will have a part in this beautiful pageant. The cast of characters will be announced in cooperation in getting and giving immediate treatment for even the slightest scratches. Miss Kesley in addition to maintaining the dispensary for the men and their families the company has built two bath houses where the men may take their hot cold shower baths after their work is done. The company has also installed a refrigerator unit to provide the men with cool palatable drinking water.

As we have said before in these columns all of Rowan County should rejoice that the business of the Kentucky Fire Brick Company is looking up. We further hope that the very near future will bring enough orders to our neighbor to warrant the putting new men back to work, so that the annual payroll will again amount to from $400,000 to $500,000 per year.

It has been reported that many individuals have inquired of the employment supervisor at the Kentucky Fire Brick Company regarding the employment of men who had no new employees will be added to the personnel, until each and every individual who had been on the rolls previous to the reduction in forces in 1937 has been offered employment.

While The Kentucky Fire Brick Company is a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation the management is vested with local men namely David B. Leadbetter, who is Vice President and General Superintendent, and Russell Becker who is the Secretary and Treasurer.

The United Supply Company store which is also a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation is well known to most of the people of Rowan County. This store is operated as a convenience for the employees and residents in the community.

Stablemates

The fundamental dramatic stand- bys that go to insure the financial success of a picture at the box office are included in Metro's latest sentimental race-track saga. Nor could two better protagonists have been selected than Wallace Berry and Mickey Rooney to convey all the surefire humor that oozes out of the yarn. The production is done in a sepia tint in which Director Sam Wood captures the race-track atmosphere with a zippy finish. Berry and Rooney carry the film as the pair who team up at the ebb of their fortunes. Berry is a boozier veterinarian who helps patch up Rooney's horse. They form a father and son partnership when Rooney learns that Berry is wanted on a criminal charge. He tries to keep Berry away from the track at the big race by insulting him. Berry, however, risks all for his "partner". Stablemates will be shown Thurs- day and Friday, December 8-9.

My Lucky Star

For exhibitors and fans alike, the latest Sonja Henie picture is a lucky star indeed, since it main- tains the high entertainment stand- ards established by its predecessors and should fare equally well as a money-getter. If anything, the skating star shows improve- ment, possibly because her part is endowed with more warmth and acceptability. Production is char- acteristically lavish, with one num- ber, Alice in Wonderland, being particularly arresting. The campus background of the film and the magnitude and beauty of Miss Henie's wardrobe affords the feature two additional and very timely selling points. Joan Davis and Cesar Romero shine in a uni- versally good supporting cast. Music is catchy, with two numbers possessing hit potentialities. Ver- satile direction by Roy Del Ruth. My Lucky Star will be shown at the Cozy Theatre Sunday and Mon- day, December 11-12.

Group Singing
Benediction Mr. Trayner
George Young, chairman of the program committee, deserves commendations for planning the best program of the year. There was never a dull minute in the entire evening. One of the outstanding spots was the reading and singing of Miss Louise Minish, Annapolis, this being her first appearance before a Morehead audience.

Dr. J. G. Black and Dr. Rex Hoke came through in their usual humorous style.

The Rhythm Quartet, composed of Moon Edwards, playing the jug, M. Minish the fiddle, Emmos Asher, the guitar, and George Young on the piano was really full of rhythm. Several vocal solos by Josephine Francis and duets by Marianna and Earl K. Seniff were beautifully sung. George Young played the accompaniment on the piano for the special numbers and the group singing. Jean Luzader danced in her usual fine fashion.

Ladies Night is annually one of the high-spots of the year for the Mens Club and last night was no exception.

Economic Highlights

Business Shows Increase In A Great Many Lines

As we approach the Christmas season, business continues its march forward on practically all fronts. It is true there have been some sharp reverses in the security markets of late, but they have been due, not to the business situation, but largely to the severely strained relations between this country and Germany an immensely serious matter whose end is not yet in sight, and whose ultimate effect on commerce and trade cannot now be accurately forecast.

A glance over the complete figures for October shows it to have been a very good month in almost all lines. In some, it was exceptionally good. This same favorable trend extended into the first three weeks of November, and there seems no reason why it should change in the near future. One of the best signs is the fact that rise in demand for certain basic products, such as steel, has been materially greater than to rise in production. This indicates that further gains in activity may be confidently expected before long. And, of equal importance, the inventory situation, which was extremely bad last spring, is steadily improving.

Some briefs of interest follow: Construction building in October touched the highest peak in a number of years. Unusual activity is found in the residential field. Future steady improvement is expected here, and also in industrial construction.

Electric Power Output is at good levels for the season. The utilities new expansion program is slowly getting underway. The apparent "truce" reached between this industry and the Administration is an encouraging factor.

Agriculture: Is still a comparatively dark spot in an otherwise brightening economic picture. As this column has observed before, the government's farm program has suffered practically complete collapse. On the other hand, farm income for the year will reach a fairly good total, and no "crisis" in agriculture is to be expected.

Price: Commodity prices have been strengthening, but most authorities regard them over a considerable period of time are anticipated.

Retail Trade: Is improving in most sections of the country, along with purchasing power. Many stores are revising their buying programs in the belief that sales will be substantially greater this winter and spring than seemed possible a few months ago.

Transportation: Railroad carloadings are tending upward, but the industry's financial position remains almost as precarious as before. Hopes are pinned to a large extent on possible congressional action to alleviate some of the lines' troubles.

It is an interesting and important fact that no one seems to expect recovery to attain boom proportions. Most experts think that the rate of improvement will be comparatively slow—that we are in a steady, long-pull trend.

TAKING STOCK OF OUR POSSESSIONS

Toward the end of the year every well-run business takes inventory of stock on hand and arrives at an estimate of net worth. The farm business is like any other in its need for such definite information. In taking its inventory, the farm home must of course be counted, since the family assets include the house, its furnishings, equipment, the clothing, and personal farm-home inventory as an item of net worth, Miss Ida Hagerman, home-management specialist at the Kentucky College of Agriculture, suggests a number of other uses for it. The total value of furnishings serves as a basis on which to insure household goods and also on which to make adjustments if there should be a loss from fire or flood. It also shows what future needs may arise as things wear out and what amounts should be set aside to replace them. It shows too, whether there has been family progress. If the family possessions have increased during the year, for instance, by a piece of new kitchen equipment, new chairs or other furnishings, their presence value becomes a part of the net worth. The inventory, Miss Hagerman says, should include not only permanent furnishings and equipment but accessories in each room, silver, clothing, recreational articles, household linens, china, and small equipment.

IN AND AROUND THE HOME

Ever so many mothers are faced with the problem of determining how much of the family income shall be spent for food. Naturally, many factors influence the amount that is spent. Individual tastes, nutrition requirements, avoidance of waste and economical planning control the food budget as definitely as does the size of one's pocketbook.

In years gone by it was estimated that no more than one-fourth of the income should be spent for food. But when the income falls below what might be considered even a moderate sum, the allowance for food may be above the allotted one-fourth, because food is of first importance on the list of necessities. Obviously, as the income increases the percentage for food decreases.

First of all, good cooking is essential if good meals are to be enjoyed. So, no matter what materials are used, the ability of the cook makes more than a little to do with the cost of meals.

Clever marketing often makes it possible to provide excellent meals at a low cost, too. Buying in quantity, whenever a larger amount can be used to advantage always is an economy. The use of canned fruits and vegetables in place of out-of-season shipped fresh ones makes for a greater variety of foods at a moderate cost.

Consideration of the edible, and waste materials in foods is important. Meats containing a large amount of bone, and fruits and vegetables in place of out-of-season shipped fresh ones makes for a greater variety of foods at a moderate cost.

much food value at low cost. Dried fruits and dried vegetables are cheap sources of energy and mineral salts. The food vegetables and cabbage have a long season and are very inexpensive. They supply many valuable nutrients for the minimum outlay.

The planning of three nourishing meals every day in the year requires a knowledge of the composition of foods as well as imagination and actual creative ability on the part of the homemaker. All the food elements — protein, fat, carbohydrates, mineral constituents and vitamins must be served daily.

For some time we've been hearing that the men-folk are drinking more tea. Perhaps they observed their English cousins who always stop work for tea and who seem to be getting along despite the fact that Great Britain has had her full share of the world's troubles. In any event it's a wise person who takes time out for a cup of hot, fragrant tea.

Women as well as men need relaxation when things pile up for them. Housecleaning time is strenuous and you will last longer and do your plants on a tray filled with small pebbles if you like them in a window. This induces a moist atmosphere because of the water which seeps through the drainage hole and collects at the bottom of the tray.

Many Kinds Of Vines
Perhaps vines appeal to you more than house-plants and answer your own particular need. Of course there are ever so many different varieties that do well in the houses. English ivy, French ivy and Philodendron are very satisfactory.

Philodendron grows in the shade and is the easiest of all to raise. If you have a group of three windows in your living room that have been a problem for you try putting a pot of Philodendron on the casing on both sides of the center window. Choose wall brackets in keeping with the woodwork of the room.

No matter how little sun your vines may have they will do well and grow many inches every month. It's a good idea to leave the vines in their original clay pots and put them, pot and all, into the pot of the wall bracket. Be sure the decorative pot is large enough to allow a packing of peatmoss or sphagnum between it and the other pot. This creates the healthy, moist condition required by all plants except those of the cactus family.

START DAY RIGHT WITH BREAKFAST
Breakfast should be a persuasive meal. It should start the day right and life the spirits even of those who "hate to get up in the morning."

Now that the weather is cooler, it is easier to tempt that illusive morning appetite. And with the days filled with the activities of a new season, it is very important that the first meal of the day provide energy for work and play.

One of the best ways of turning breakfast into a real meal is to include bacon or ham or sausages in the menu. These are not only palatable but they are energy providing foods, giving the body "fuel" for the wear and tear around the sausages. Return to the oven and cook slowly until the sausages and apples are well baked. Baste them occasionally with dripping in the pan.

Sausage links and pineapple are served together frequently for a tasty breakfast combination. The sausages are cooked first; then the pineapple slices are browned in the sausage fat.

BUTTER NECESSARY TO MAKE SANDWICH
When is a sandwich not a sandwich? When there is little or no butter in it, say nutrition experts at the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture. Insist on the sides of the sandwich being well battered, they urge. Butter is one of the most necessary and economical foods, these same experts declare. Many foods cost more and yet are less nourishing. Eat plenty of good butter; insist on generous patens when eating at restaurants; help yourself liberally to it at home.

These same authorities on food and health believe more milk, cream, cheese and other dairy products should be used. In addition to good, rich cream in coffee and on cereals, there are many ways of cooking with cream—Creamed onions, tomatoes, potatoes, corn and other vegetables—sour cream salads

Cranberries Adorn King Turkey!

Thanksgiving—turkey—cranberries! The words have the kind of rhythm associated with roast beef, mashed potatoes, apple pie, or any other typical American menu. But because it's traditional, let's not feel dull about it.

Of course, there are many households that wouldn't enjoy Thanksgiving without the good old-fashioned cranberry sauce to give color and tang to the festive turkey of the day. But why stop there? Cranberries are entirely too general to have other functions at the feast day table. Try garnishing the bird with inch-thick slices of orange cut round. On top of each orange-chunk set a marshmallow that has been freshened, not browned in the oven. In the center of the marshmallow, place a raw, bright-red cranberry. Spread parsley for green emphasis around the edge of the turkey platter and be prepared for a delighted chorus of oh's and ah's from the folk gathered around the festive board.

As for desserts, there's Cranberry Meringue Pie, for instance. It's a change from plain cranberry pie and delightfully ornamental too.

CRANBERRY MERINGUE PIE
1 1/2 cups sugar
1/2 cup cornstarch
1 pound (4 cups) Cranberries
1 egg, separated
2 tablespoons flour
Baked pie shell

Boil sugar and water for 5 minutes. Add cranberries, cook until skins pop open. Beat egg yolks with four and salt, pour cranberries over mixture. Cook for 2 1/2 minutes, stirring constantly. Add butter and vanilla. Cool. Fill pie shell. Bake in slow oven, 325 F., 15 minutes.

Or, Steamed Cranberry Pudding, with Foamy Cranberry Sauce, another tasty dessert that won't be hard on the eyes.

STEAMED CRANBERRY PUDDING
1/2 cup sugar
1/2 cup water
1/2 cup raisins
1/2 cup bread crumbs
Mix ingredients in the order given. Turn into a well greased mold. Cover with waxed paper and steam for 2 hours. Serve with Foamy Cranberry Sauce.

FOAMY CRANBERRY SAUCE
1/2 cup cranberry juice
1/2 cup condensed milk
1 egg, separated
1/2 cup powdered sugar
Dressed 2nd yolk
Cream butter and sugar together. Add beaten egg yolk, cranberry juice and orange rind. Fold in stiffly beaten egg white just before serving.

The Best Way to Bake biscuits

Curiously, nothing short of perfection is expected of a biscuit when it is put into bake, regardless of the possible antiquity of the stove, the uncontrolled and uneven heat of its oven, to say nothing of many other factors which make for disappointment, such as crowding the dough into too small a pan, and trying to bake other types of food exacting various temperatures at the same time in the biscuits.

The best way to bake biscuits with a crusty surface encompassing fluffy goodness is to arrange them separately on a hot, moist, and buttered sheet, then slip the sheet into the oven of an up-to-date gas range which assures an even distribution of heat throughout the compartment. Better still, there's an automatic heat control to regulate the oven burner and maintain the precise temperature required.

The FEUD at SINGLE SHOT

By Luke Short

Behind the bank lay the single adobe building that housed the office of the sheriff. The courthouse lay up the street.

Dave and Rosy turned by the bank and half-way down its length so as to be well out of view of a glance from the sheriff's window, they turned in to the hitchback. They left the body of the bushwhacker on his horse and covered the fifty steps to the sheriff's office, wondering if he had seen them.

Dave knocked firmly, passed for a sound of a voice and hearing it, entered. In the far corner, his back trustingly to the door, sat the sheriff, laboring at something in the depths of his rolltop desk.

"Take a chair," he said, over his shoulder. Rosy closed the door and took the chair nearest the sheriff. Dave stood in the middle of the floor, his thumbs hooked negligently in his belt. His dark face was still, his black eyes wary.

"Got a package for you Hank," Dave said. The sheriff switched his chair, his little eye, sweeping the room. Dave stood in the positions of the two men before him.

"Well?" Dave asked. "If you can't get holes in your head, you'll take a tip," the sheriff said meaningly. "When I say stay out of this town, I mean it."

"I'm talkin' to you," the sheriff said flatly. "You're not talkin' to me." Rosy saw it first. Maybe it was the flicker of the red-rimmed eyes or the throbbing of the large vein in the sheriff's temple. Rosy leaped out of his chair, throwing his body across the fat belly of the sheriff, pinning his hands down tight against his gun butt. "You big tub," Rosy said savagely. "I oughta bend a gun barrel over your thick skull. We ain't makin' fight talk and we ain't takin' any either. There's a dead man out here on a horse."

The sheriff was breathin' heavily. "Lemme up," he said. "Get his guns, Dave," Rosy said. Dave slipped the guns out from beneath the fat and pudgy hands and laid them on the desk.

"You say you got a dead man out there?" the sheriff asked. "If you wasn't so knot-headed, you'd have known that two minutes ago, Rosy said. "Show me the body," the sheriff said.

He picked his guns off a desk and feathered them. It was a gesture of peace. The dead man was brought in and taken into a back room of the office, and laid on a cot. Sheriff Lowe listened to the story of the bushwhacking, then looked at the man.

"You seen him around town?" Dave asked. "Nary one. I don't aim to forget him like that, but you can't always be sure."

Rosy stood up. "Well, sheriff, we got business. If you think of any more questions, you'll run into us around town."

The sheriff smiled a slow, crinkling smile that made his fat face look amiable and pleasant. "I reckon I will," he said. "Go ahead. Seems to me you'll do any dang thing you please anyway. So long as you don't let any blood dot it, help yourself."

Outside on the street again. Rosy took a deep breath and looked at Dave. "I reckon I just had to jump him." "I'm glad you did," Dave said. "It was either that or a gunfight."

They stopped at the corner. "Take a look around," Dave said. "I'm goin' to party with old Pearson in the bank here. Drop a few questions about this bushwhacker. Maybe you'll get an idea."

Dave went into the bank and Rosy sauntered across the street to the Free Throw, and shouldered through the doors. The bar by the right, the gambling tables to the left, the door to the dance hall in the rear. He bought a drink at the mahogany bar, then crossed the big, box like room to the far table against the wall and mingled with the watchers.

FIFTH CHAPTER Martin Quinn was at the box. He caught sight of Rosy, called to another gambler who was idling out from behind the table.

"Howdy, Rand, how's things?" Quinn greeted him. "Let's have a drink."

They picked a spot at the back end of the bar. "Did I see a question broker" out in your eyes when you looked at me?" Quinn asked.

"You did," Rosy said. Quinn listened carefully while Rosy told him of the events which had brought them to Single Shot.

"He got off the train and somebody slams him?" he said softly to Dave. "Why?"

"Dunno. He's got a good ranch, but she's spavined. Land mortgaged, no stock, buildin's poor. Gits' hand, good grass, plenty tell me."

"Sandy hair, cut with a drawknife water and a big range. Now you about three years ago, I'd say; three week's beard, blue eyes, four inches shorter'n me, square face, missin' a few teeth. He was wearin' waist overalls, dirty blue flannel shirt, black vest. Black stetson. "Any clay on his clothes?" Quinn asked.

Rosy looked at him keenly. "Now you mention it, there was. Not much though."

"Look at the books out at the Draw Three?" then Quinn, said. "Draw Three!" Rosy asked, his voice quiet, his eyes sullenly stilled. "Sure. They're working in clay out there. That's men in here from a whole bunch of mines to the south and some to the east, and prospectors too, but you can tell a Draw Three man every time if he hasn't changed work clothes."

"Let me know what you find out. Rosy strode out the door. When he walked into the sheriff's office the fat man was sitting in the same chair, bent over the same papers.

"I got a tip on that bushwhacker. Rosy said. "He had clay on his clothes, didn't he?"

"That's the sheriff said. "The Draw Three is workin' in clay, ain't they?"

"I was expectin' that," the sheriff said calmly. "I got a man on the way out there now to check up."

"You think Hammond figured it might be a little easier to do business with Mary Winters if Dave was out of the way, is that it?"

"That's damn near it," Rosy said grimly. "Don't you reckon the Jasper might have been some one Dave knows in prison an that had a strudge again' him?" the sheriff asked. "I know he isn't," Rosy said flatly. "That's the kind of excuse these small town laws start lookin' for."

"How do you know it ain't? he said. "Because I was Turner's cellmate."

The sheriff blanked. "You was?" "I run afloat a tough-takin' law," Rosy said. He turned and started for the door.

"Wait," the sheriff said. "I'm comin' with you."

Rosy did not talk as they walked together down to the corner and turned into the bank. Inside, he saw a partitioned-off room at the front, a frosted glass door marked "Private" opening on to it.

Dave soon came out with Pearson and they walked over to Rosy. The sheriff hung back.

"Mr. Pearson, this is Rosy Rand, the D Bar T's new foreman. Rosy slid a surprised glance at Dave, then looked at Pearson. The sheriff looked at the banker, covered a spare, thin body. Sparse gray hair covered an intellectual head, the eyes were sharp, black and deepset. Rosy guessed at once he was a New Englander.

"Hand," he said bowing. "A pleasure so you're the young man who prevented the train robbery last night?"

"I reckon I just walked into it," Rosy drawled. "I couldn't very well back out without shooting."

"Well, I had the payroll money for three mines coming in on that train. Of course, they were insured but then—it saved a very costly delay. I think there will be a reward for you, young man."

Rosy started to protest, but Pearson held up his hand. "I know. But insurance companies like to reward men just as much for the prevention of the crime as for its cure." Turning to Dave again, he said. "Well, Dave, Things may brighten up."

Pearson turned and left them and before Rosy could speak, the sheriff was beside him. "The bushwhacker likely came from the Draw Three," Rosy told Dave bluntly.

"Maybe," the sheriff said. Dave looked at Rosy. The sheriff saw a jaw muscles in Dave's face bulge a little.

"The sheriff thought so enough to send a man out to ask," Rosy said. "So that check—" Dave began, then clipped off his speech, turned on his heel and strode to the door. "Where you goin'?" the sheriff asked.

"Git a horse if you're comin'," Rosy told him. The sheriff had a horse at the hitchback, and they mounted and headed for them. He reined up, and (Continued On Page Five) seemingly with the sheriff spoke.

"Name of Freeman. Fired three weeks ago. Hammond could tell by that scar you found under his chin."

Dave looked at Rosy and they both looked at the sheriff as he was sucking his teeth complacently.

The sheriff turned to the deputy. "You go back to the office," he told the man.

Silently, they rode up to the main building. The sheriff loosened his guns, and took the lead. Dave and Rosy following.

The door was open and the sheriff strode into the office without knocking. It was a long affair, with a wide desk at the far end at which Hammond was seated, bent over a ledger. He looked up at their entrance and rose.

The mining man was tall and grizzled with kindly blue eyes. He had a mane of almost white hair, and a full moustache to match it.

He shook hands with the sheriff. "These genes have got some questions to ask," the sheriff said, and thereupon introduced them.

The sheriff shook hands, the older man warmly, the two younger perfunctorily and without speech. Hammond bid them to be seated, but Dave stood up.

"You don't know me, Hammond, I reckon," he began. "Leastways, you didn't seem to recognize the name. I'm Dave Turner, D Bar T."

"Some whippoorwill took a crack at me with a greener last night," Dave said slowly. "Band killed him. The deputy we met on the road just said he used to work for you. Is that right?"

"That's right," Hammond said quietly.

"He used to work here. He was canned because he tried to run a high-grade dieter with my foreman, Shed Martin. What about it?"

"And you want the D Bar T water," Dave said slowly. "You tried to bully my sister into giving it up and when she wouldn't, you threatened to take it to court when you know it's our water and has been for forty years."

The sheriff spoke up quickly. He now stood in a corner, his sixguns resting steadily in his palms. "And without any leather-sippin'," he said.

Dave and Hammond glared at each other, and Hammond slowly rose.

"Turner, he began, "I've killed men, for less than that. And killed 'em."

"I bought that water," Hammond said slowly, "paid for it in hard cash. I need it to mine with and I'm going to take it. The map shows it's on the section I bought, and I'll use every drop of it if I have to drink it."

"And I say you won't use a drop of it if I have to take a raft and live on the lake to see that you don't," Dave said.

"Don't make a move," the sheriff said softly.

"We've got the papers for that land," Dave said. "Come up and take a look for yourself some time."

"You can go into Phoenix and look in the Land Office files of the year 1883. Whoever said you that land was running a sappy on you from the ground up. And if you think you can take it with a bunch of killers—"

Hammond, in his rage, forgot he had guns. He lunged at Dave's throat as Dave leaped to meet him, his face contorted with fury. As soon as the sheriff saw that Rosy was trying to part them, he holstered his guns and stepped in. It was a full minute before Dave and Hammond were separated, the sheriff pushing his grunting bulk against the desk. Rosy held Dave's arms. Hammonds eyes were murdering.

"Turner, I'll kill you like a damned coyote the next time I see you."

If I don't hunt you down first, Hammond," Dave rasped, his voice hoarse with fury.

Hammond lunged, only to be held by the sheriff. Dave struggled with Rosy.

Get him out!" the sheriff ordered. "The hell the trail at the notch an hour after noon, heading more west than the trail would have taken them. Rosy had not spoken since the sheriff saw that Rosy was trying to part them, he holstered his guns and stepped in. It was a full minute before Dave and Hammond were separated, the sheriff pushing his grunting bulk against the desk. Rosy held Dave's arms. Hammonds eyes were murdering.

"I reckon I lost my temper," he said.

"Plumb," Rosy said briefly. "I figured you'd be sorry if you done anything to the old man. After all, we didn't have no proof."

"It took me a long time to see that," Dave said slowly. "We haven't proof that he paid the man. All we can do is guess. He didn't take the idea much, did he?"

"He took it to so danged little that I'm wonderin' if we ain't shoutin' down the wrong barrel."

"What beats me, Rosy, is how Hammond knew I was comin' home. How'd he know I'd get off the train at Soldad instead of at Single Shot?"

"I been wonderin' when you'd think of that," Rosy said slowly. "How would Hammond know you be passin' there in that draw at that time of night? How'd he know about it? He crooked a leg over the saddle-horn and looked at Dave."

"Well, Harmon or Finnegan could have picked it up around Ted or Mary and then went to town and got a couple of drinks under their belts and spilled it."

"They could," Rosy admitted. "So maybe it wasn't Hammond at all. Maybe it was some one that wanted it to look like Hammond done it. Say, then nesters."

"I'm hopin' it isn't them," Dave said seriously.

"Here's the scheme. I thought of it last night, but didn't say any thing until I'd seen Pearson. He gave me a nice-yay extension on the paper he's holding against the spread."

"Well,"

"These nesters ad in good black land," Dave continued. "They're probably pretty good farmers. I can get a crew of Mex's to ditch water down to them from the creek. It runs about a mile from that bottom and, but it's shut off by a low hill" he looked at Rosy. "Let those nesters raise alfalfa on shares with plenty of water."

"You turnin' farmer?"

"No, but look. There's a bunch of mines around here, besides these two towns. With water we could get three crops of alfalfa in the summer. Contract some of it, hold the rest and get shighly prices for it later. In ninety days, I'll have enough from that to clean off the paper an start in stockin' the place."

A two hours' ride brought them to the top of a grassy hill and they reined up. At the bottom of the basin lay orderly checkerboards of fields, now fallow, waiting for the spring plowing.

Small in the distance, at the base of the cliff, lay a cluster of buildings.

They rode point to the cabins, skirting the fields a little. There were six houses that Dave could see, log shacks. As they approached the first shack, Dave saw a man step out the door. He noted passively that the man was so tall he had to creep to get through the door.

He was unshaven, hatless, wearing dirty bib overalls and a flannel shirt.

They reined up before him and Dave let his eyes wander casually around the place before he brought them to bear on the nester.

"Howdy," he said amiably.

The nester spat nastily. "Lookin' for some one?" he growled.

"Six of you," Dave said laconically.

"I'll do the nester reorted. He was starin into the barrel of Colt in Dave's hand."

"Close that flap!" Dave said softly. "You got a gun there just inside the door, so move slow."

The nester continued to stare insolently at him, his hands in his hip pockets.

THE ADVENTURES OF OZZIE

A "Peck" Of Trouble

This Is National Butter Week

Here's news. Six million dairy farmers have made it possible to buy good butter at the lowest prices in years, during the nation-wide butter sale starting December 5.

Butter improves the flavor of you can afford to use it freely. It's so cheap now that Give children plenty of butter. It contains Vitamin A, the protective vitamin so necessary to keep them in good health. Butter is selling at amazingly low prices just now.

Cows of America have been unusually generous in their yield of milk during this year and have made good butter not only plentiful but cheap. The Nation-Wide Sale starting December 5 assures good butter so low in price that you can afford to use it without skimping.

Employed Widows Some interesting facts about widows who are employed have been brought out in a study just made by the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs at the request of the International Labor Office for the League of Nations. The League is trying to get some light on the political, civil and a domestic status of women in various countries and asked several organizations to assist in this work.

More than 12,000 of our members answered our questionnaire from which we learn that widows, who work either in business or the professions, have a higher median earning than married women, by grouping them according to their marital status. This figure is $1,450 as compared with the married women whose median earnings are $1,235. Forty-three and one-half per cent of all the widows answering the questionnaire have one dependent. The dependents of widows, we find belong to the future generations while those of the single women are of the past generation, and of the married women, the present.

authorities, should have a quart of milk daily, every adult a pint. In addition, they should eat liberally of butter and other dairy products. TASTY, ATTRACTIVE FOOD FOR CHILDREN Children should have, food that is appetizing as well as nourishing and well balanced. In the opinion of Mrs. Mary Mumford Van Cleave, in charge of the nursery school of the University of Kentucky home economics department.

A little care and thought will make it possible to have food that is easy and appetizing. Selecting foods chosen at random from menus used at the nursery school, Mrs. Van Cleave pointed out the following: Apple sandwich; parsley sandwich; egg in spinach nest, orange betty with orange sauce, whole wheat sandwich, eggs à la Goldenrod, liver and vegetables casserole, banana custard, cauliflower with egg sauce, raw tomato wedge, carrot stick, cream of potato soup, and beefs with lemon butter.

These foods are served with other things to make a well balanced, adequate meal. Milk is served with every meal. It should never be necessary to have to coax the normally healthy child to eat, Mrs. Van Cleave says, sufficient exercise may be because of lack of appetite, and is an easily remedied matter. Have a rest period of a half hour or so before each meal, have properly served food, and then eat in the usual fashion, not paying undue attention to the child's manipulations. If adults eat as though they enjoy food, that will have the most effect anyway, as children are very susceptible, it is said.

or locomotive before, I was surgeon for a railway, which had large repair shops at the capital. When these primitive men reached the city, they were startled at the modern things which they saw for the first time in their lives. Many of them boldly came into the machine shops and stood enchanted before lathes, metal planes and the other intricate mechanical machinery. I cannot recall how many fingers and hands I amputated, due to their owners sticking them between gear wheels, but I have a most vivid recollection of one Indian grabbing the chain of an electric crane used for hoisting locomotives, and being hoisted to the roof of the plant. His right arm was crushed in the chains and gears and he hung in space howling with fear and pain. On a hastily improvised ladder I went aloft, amputated his arm, after passing ropes about his body to keep him from falling to the floor and strange to say despite the grease and dirt which got into the wound, he made an uneventful recovery and returned home a hero, and fixed for life, because the loss of his arm entitled him to beg alms.

He always referred to me, as "The nephew of God" for the part I played in making life easy for the rest of his days. MODERN WOMEN CAROLINE WHITE

Tiberius, a Roman Emperor who lived before Christ, said: "A good surgeon is far better than an army of half a million men." And long after him some observer who lived during year 1589 remarked that to be a good surgeon one needed a hawk's eye, a lion's heart and a lady's hand. I doubt if any living writer or philosopher could improve on those two remarks regarding surgeons. Recently, Dr. Norman Long of St. Louis was called to attend a man crushed in a crane. Tripped sixty feet in the air, the medical man found it impossible to lower the victim to the ground because his right arm was caught and mangled in parts of the machinery. Realizing that haste was necessary the surgeon amputated the arm. When the operation was finished the man was rushed to the hospital where he will make an uneventful recovery. Such occurrences are not uncommon, as any other doctor will tell you. I have a friend who did a similar operation, but had a railroad train on a bridge, the patient being suspended in a rope supported to keep him from falling through into the water. Men have been operated upon in caissons of compressed air far beneath the river, because of stern necessity, and to vivisection in fact there is no place that a surgeon or a doctor will not go in the performance of his duties. ## ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Almost a century ago, Abraham Lincoln and Mary Todd were married, in Springfield, Illinois, and their marriage proved to be of the most unfortunate and unhappy unions in the history of this nation.

The only comment that Lincoln ever made, in writing about his marriage, was a postscript that he added to a business letter, written to Samuel Marshall, and it is now in the possession of the Chicago Historical Society. In it Lincoln says, "There is no news here except my marriage, which to me is a matter of profound wonder."

William H. Hendon was Lincoln's law partner for a fifth of a century, and Hendon knew Lincoln better than any other man ever knew him; and Hendon said, "If Lincoln ever had a happy day in twenty years, I never knew of it."

And Hendon thought that Lincoln's marriage had a lot to do with his sadness.

I once spent three years writing a biography of Lincoln, and while I was writing it, I believe I made as careful a study of the home life of the Lincoln family as it is possible for anyone to make. I carefully examined and re-examined every shred of evidence that is in existence; and I came to the reluctant and painful conclusion that the greatest tragedy in Abraham Lincoln's life was his marriage.

Shortly after he and Mary Todd were engaged, Lincoln began to realize that they were exact opposites in every way, and that they could never be happy. They were the exact opposites in temperament, in tastes, in training, and desires.

For example, Mary Todd had attended a snobbish finishing school in Kentucky; she spoke French with a Parisian accent, and was one of the best educated women in Illinois. But Lincoln had attended school a total of less than twelve months in his entire life.

Mary Todd was deeply interested in dress and show and ostentation. But Lincoln took no interest whatever in his appearance. In fact, he would sometimes walk down the street with one trouser leg on the outside of his boot and the other trouser leg stuffed in the inside of his boot.

Shortly after they were engaged Lincoln wrote her a letter saying that he didn't love her sufficiently to marry her. He gave this letter to his friend, Joshua Speed, and asked Speed to give it to Mary Todd. Speed tore up the letter, threw it in the fire and told Lincoln to go and see Mary Todd himself. He did, and when he told her that he didn't want to marry her, she started to cry. Lincoln could never stand seeing a woman cry, so he took her in his arms and kissed her and said he was sorry.

The wedding day was set for January 1, 1841. The wedding cake was baked, the guests were assembled, the preacher was there, but Lincoln didn't appear. Why? Well, Mary Todd's sister afterwards explained it by saying that Lincoln went crazy. And her husband added, "Yes, crazy as a loon." The fact is that he did become ill—angrily ill in body and ill in mind, and he sank into a spell of melancholy so deep and so terrible that it almost unbalanced his reason. His friends found him at daylight, mumbling incoherent sentences. He said he didn't want to live. He wrote a poem on suicide and had it published in one of the Springfield papers, and his friends took his knife a way from him, to keep him from killing himself.

For almost two years after that, Lincoln had nothing whatever to do with Mary Todd. Then a self-appointed matchmaker in Springfield brought them together, behind closed doors, and Mary Todd told Lincoln it was his duty to marry her. And he did.

While I was out in Illinois, writing that book about Lincoln, I went to see Uncle Jimmy Miles, a farmer who lives near Springfield. One of his uncles was Herndon, Lincoln's law partner, and one of his aunts ran a boarding house where Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln came to live shortly after they were married.

Uncle Jimmy Miles told me that he had often heard his aunt tell this story: One morning, Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln were having breakfast with the rest of the boarders, and Lincoln said something that displeased his wife, so she picked up a cup of hot coffee and dashed it into his face, and she did it in the presence of the other boarders. Lincoln didn't answer her. He didn't scold her. He said nothing, while the landlady brought a wet cloth and wiped off his face and his clothes. Similar incidents probably occurred in the Lincoln household for years.

But let us not judge Mrs. Lincoln too harshly. She finally went insane, and perhaps much earlier her mind was being affected by oncoming insanity.

One of the most beautiful things I know about Abraham Lincoln is the fact that he endured his unhappy home life for twenty-three years without bitterness, without resentment and without saying a word about it to anyone. He endured it with Christ-like forgiveness, and with a patience that was almost divine.

Who would teach men to die, would at the same time teach them to live. —Montagu

Feud At Single Shot

Dave's gun exploded and a chip of wood behind the nester's head splintered off.

Dave saw the nester's face set a little as he leaped away from the door. He reached in and got the rawhide latching string and swung the door shut.

"Now step out here," Dave said. He leathered his gun and the nester stepped close to his arms.

Dave folded his arms.

"I'm Dave Turner," he announced.

"How would you like to clear off my land?" he asked softly.

With the quickness of a cat, the nester drove his fist into the nose of Dave's horse. The horse jerked his head high, reared, and Dave slid out of the saddle. The nester turned and ran toward the house. Dave tripped him and the nester crashed into the door.

Dave stood a little ways off from him, unbuckling his cartridge belt and holsters, letting them fall to the ground.

Get up and take a beatin'," Dave said softly, kicking the guns out of reach.

The nester rushed in, head long, and Dave stepped aside and straightened him up with a looping left to the mouth. Dave let him walk into a straight right arm three times, then avoiding a low kick and falling arms, he sank a body swing to the nester's stomach, dishing the heavier man up.

Dave stood over him, breathing heavy.

"If you want any more, stand up," Dave said.

"Not me. That's enough."

"Look what I got in the round-up!" Rosy's voice said from the corner of the house.

Dave turned and saw four men standing sullenly before Rosy, who had dismounted and made the rounds of the other shacks while Dave was fighting.

"Get in the house," Dave said. "I got some turkey to talk."

The beaten nester threw open the door. The house consisted of one room, a double-decker bunk at one end, a stove and table at the other. Four home-made chairs and a shelf comprised the rest of the furniture.

"Sit down," Dave ordered, standing in the middle of the room.

"I reckon you know why I'm here."

They nodded.

"I can run you off this land right now and burn your shacks. I reckon you know that."

"Sure," one of the nester's, a small wiry man in middle age replied.

"All right," Dave answered. "I got a proposition to make. You can take it or leave it. You five can farm on a sixty-fourty split here on an alfalfa crop. Startin' tomorrow, you can break up all the land you can. I'll get a crew to put in ditches in a week and a half you can be ready to put in the crop. With plenty of water, we'll get three crops this summer and a market for the hay with all the horses there are in these two towns and the mines. Suit yourselves. Stick here and take a forty per cent share and work, or clear out—way out."

"You mean you're puttin' water down here?" the middle-aged man asked.

"That's it."

The nester gave a brief glance at his companions.
