The Great Kentucky Vendetta Described.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Dec. 23.—[Special.]—Your correspondent leaves for Kentucky and paints the condition of the state with the greatest interest. He has been in the state three years, and has seen the birth and growth of the state in the bloodshed and the ruin of its great capital and its wealth. A great deal of money has been spent, and the people are now going to a new state of things. The city of Lexington has been burned, and the town is now a mass of ruins. The state of Kentucky is no more than a mass of ruins and ashes.

Mr. Martin received $4,000 for his farm, which is the best of the state, and will make a beautiful farm. The town of Lexington is now in ruins, and the people are living in the ruins. The town of Lexington is the only place where the people are living in the ruins.
