Stewart Seen As Candidate In August

Morehead Man May Seek Place As Clerk Of Court Of Appeals

Former United States Commissioner and City Judge T. Lee Stewart of Morehead is held as a likely candidate for the Republican nomination this year for Clerk of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky.

Judge Stewart said today that he had not made up his mind whether to seek the nomination but that many of his friends were urging him to make the race. Significant is the fact that Judge John S. Cooper, Republican candidate for Governor, was in Morehead Tuesday conferring with Judge Stewart and other Republican leaders.

Two years ago Judge Stewart was nominated for the Clerk of the Court of Appeals office but was defeated in a Democratic landslide. If he seeks the office this year he will not have any opposition in the primary.

Keenhope, Republican nominee for Governor, who is beaten by Governor Chandler, in 1935, is also a candidate for Governor this year. Stewart will not file for the nomination and that complete harmony will be maintained within the party.

36 Of Every 100 Social Security Cards Thirty-six of every hundred persons who applied for social security numbers in 1938 were women, according to James A. Chaney, manager of the Old-Age Insurance Bureau office in Ashland, Ky. "Of 5,700,000 applicants for social security numbers received in 1938 a total of 2,100,000 were filed by women," Mr. Chaney said. "Of 30,000 social security numbers which our office issued last year, it is likely that more than 10,000 were given to women, using the same percentage as that of the nation. "In 1937, the first year in which old-age insurance was in operation, only 27 percent of the applicants for social security numbers came from women. "The largest age group applying for numbers in 1938 was composed of persons who were under 20 years of age. They represented 25 percent of the year's total, practically all being boys and girls over 15 who were getting jobs for the first time," Mr. Chaney concluded.

Social Security Field Office Moves The removal of the Ashland Field Office of the Social Security Board to the eleventh floor of the Second National Bank Building will be accomplished Saturday and Sunday, April 15th and 16th, it was announced today by James A. Chaney, Manager of this federal agency. "The removal from our present quarters on the third floor will be accomplished without interference to our operations," Mr. Chaney said. "We will begin issuing account numbers and handling all other business in the new office, Monday, April 17".

The Ashland Field Office serves the counties of Boyd, Breathitt, Carter, Elliott, Floyd, Greenup, Johnson, Knott, Lawrence, Perry, Pike, Rowan and Wolfe. Since the Ashland Field Office was opened it has issued more than 100,000 account numbers and has filed more than 400 claims for lump-sum benefits payable to residents of the area, which it serves.

Crippled Children Drive Are Saught

Citizens throughout Kentucky have an opportunity again to give the State's child a "lift", as the Kentucky Society for Crippled Children mails to its contributors a letter of work accomplished during the past year and asking for a renewal of membership. Memberships range from $1.00 to $10.00 and upon the support gained in this manner the Crippled Children Society depends for its existence. Upon the result of this annual appeal also depends the amount of supplementary funds turned over to the Kentucky Crippled Children Commission for extension of its work.

This spring the Society is not conducting an intensive campaign of personal solicitation, but is sending its regular membership appeal to friends who for many years have kept the work alive. They are members of service clubs—such as Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions, Women's Clubs, church societies—and individuals who realize what the splendid work of the allied organizations Commission and Society—means to hundreds of boys and girls who, without the help given by these agencies through free clinics and free treatment, would remain life-long cripples.

The Commission holds clinics in every part of the state, and finances care for crippled children in hospitals in Ashland, Louisville, and Lexington, where physicians and surgeons give freely of their time and skill to repair broken bodies. The Society aids the Commission in its program and promotes general interest in the social and educational needs of crippled children, as well as in their physical rehabilitation. The Society is organizing local committees in the various counties to study the problems of crippled children in their respective communities.

During 1938 the Commission examined in its clinics 2,594 cases and provided treatment for 1,101. There is always a waiting list and it is to help reach children on this waiting list that the Kentucky Society for Crippled Children asks for a renewal of membership.

Date For Arbor Day Observance Set In Nation

Arbor Day provides a timely opportunity to demonstrate the national interest in forest conservation. R. F. Hemingway, Forest Supervisor, Cumberland National Forest, said today in calling attention to the 67th anniversary of the first Arbor Day, occurring this month.

Hemingway pointed out that special significance can be attached this year to the Arbor Day tradition. "The planting of trees," he said, "is a symbol of our continual efforts to help nature help us. It is more than increasing our supply of a vital natural resource or adding to our priceless heritage of shade trees. It is a nationwide demonstration of our faith in the future, and its observance broadens our perspective of local and national problems. Arbor Day tree planting can exemplify our will for peace and our wish for a happier and more provident civilization. "While the planting of trees is only a part of the job of building up our lives, it is the first step in restoring the productivity and scenic appeal of millions of depleted acres. Once planted, the trees must be safeguarded from losses due to fire, disease, and insects. As they grow in size, thinning operations are often necessary to increase the growth rate of the most promising individual trees. And as they reach maturity, cutting must be carried out in such a way that future crops of timber from the same area may be assured without depending upon the expensive alternative of planting nursery-grown stock.

"When J. Sterling Morton, whose birthday on April 22 would be the logical date for a national holiday except for the wide range in tree planting seasons throughout the country, first proposed that a day be especially set apart and consecrated to tree planting in the State of Nebraska," there were many of his fellow citizens who were inclined to shake their heads at him for attempting to convert even a part of what some people called "The Great American Desert" into woodland. However, his supporters saw to it that more than a million trees were planted in Nebraska on that first Arbor Day 67 years ago. Now, Arbor Day is provided for by law in more than two-thirds of the States, and it has become almost a world-wide festival of tree planting.

"The Soil Conservation Service recognizes tree planting as an essential factor in its program. Other agencies in both Federal and State Governments have projected the Arbor Day idea on an extensive scale to lessen flood losses, control erosion, produce timber crops, improve wildlife conditions, and add to the attractiveness of recreation areas.

Brown Gives Views On State Education

 tighten their purse strings. The three, he said, were, health, education and the unfortunate wards of the State.

Pointing out that an attempt had been made in the present campaign to set the interests of each group off against the other, the speaker declared that no teacher worthy of his profession could ever be placed in the position of opposing adequate care for their old.

In examining the status of Kentucky in the building of educational institutions, Mr. Brown declared that Kentucky ranked forty-fourth among the forty-eight States. On the basis of ability to pay or ability to support an adequate school system, he stated, Kentucky's economic status was seventh among the other states. His statistics, he said, were cited from the recent survey of the American School Board Journal.

"The average per capita expenditure in the United States for education ending June 30, 1936 was $51.77," Mr. Brown asserted. "The average per capita expenditure for Kentucky was $25.36. In other words we are a little less than half the average. I am sure no Kentuckian is proud of this record."

Continuing on the status of education in Kentucky, the speaker said the Constitution provided for an efficient system of common schools throughout the state. In other words, he said, the farmers of Kentucky government contemplated that every section of the State should have an efficient system of schools.

At the present, he declared, Kentucky has approximately 800,000 children of school age. Something over 240,000 of these children have only a 7-month school term.

"Certainly," he stated, "our Legislature has not fulfilled the mandate of that Constitutional provision in giving an efficient school system to these 240,000 of our youthful citizens."

The team represents the lightest weight players that Morehead has ever played on the field. However, Ellis Johnson believes that the two spring practice games the Eagles will have should go a long way toward taking the greenies out of the freshmen players whom the Eagles will have to depend on as the bulk of next fall's varsity.

Johnson and Miller are not playing their plans to beat the Thundering Herd. Rather they want the experience for the club that they can gain in this match.

If you placed millions of dollars worth of advertising each year

You would follow the same principles that the major companies in the United States pursue—you would place it in the hands of reliable advertising agencies—experts who can guarantee that you will receive the most for your advertising dollar.

By what basis does a national advertising agency determine the advertising value of publications?

Possessing an accurate knowledge of how to get the best results from each dollar expended, an advertising expert considers these four cardinal points in rating a newspaper or any other advertising medium—

- 1—Paid-up Circulation. 2—How well it covers its territory. 3—Price of advertising per column inch or agate line, and 4—The buying power of the people it serves and its connection with the product being advertised.

You—Mr. Merchant Can Very Wisely Adopt the same Advertising Principles

Make a close investigation of the circulation of a newspaper before spending your advertising dollar—ascertain the number of families that newspaper reaches—Families that are prospective customers—determine the price per column inch you will pay—Find out the actual standing of that newspaper with your clientele. Spend your advertising money wisely so that you will receive value for every dollar you spend.

OVER 3,300 SUBSCRIBERS — ALMOST 3 TIMES THE CIRCULATION REACHED BY ANY OTHER PUBLICATION IN ROWAN COUNTY

The high esteem with which the columns of this newspaper are held by the people of this section of Kentucky is forcibly and undeniably explained with the matter of fact record that the Rowan County News has over 3,300 subscribers, almost three times as much circulation as any other publication in Rowan County. Yet the advertising rates have not been raised for local merchants—in other words an advertisement placed in this newspaper is worth almost three times as much as that placed in any other publication in this county.

The Rowan County News reaches eighty-five percent of the homes of this county and also has a large circulation in Elliott, Morgan, Fleming, Bath, Menifee and Carter Counties—all of which is in a shopping radius of Morehead. Ninety percent of the 3,300 subscribers on the Rowan County News lists are in a territory within 25 miles of Morehead.

There must be a reason why the people prefer the Rowan County News. For 43 years it has been their newspaper and each year that has passed has seen the circulation lists increase.

THE HARDYS RIDE HIGH

Adapted from the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture
 HALSEY RAINES.

There was a worried expression on Emily Hardy's face as she hung up the phone and turned to her sister Milly.

"It was James," she said with concern. "I do hope he's all right. He was so mysterious when he called, and sounded awfully strange. He wants Marion and Andy home at once, too."

Milly glanced at her watch. "Andy should be home any minute now from the football game, and Marion went shopping with her friend Rosamund. They'll be home soon."

Judge James Hardy, hurrying down the street at twice his normal rate of speed, seemed strangely excited. He held his hat in his hand. His face was flushed as he opened the front door of his home, and his salutation was an incredble one.

"Whoopee!" he cried.

"His wife could only stare in utter astonishment. "James!"

"Look at me, Emily! Do I look different?" Judge Hardy continued wildly.

"There's a little dust on your coat sleeve, and your hair is mussed..."

million dollars is?"

"I'm sure it's a great deal of money," Emily said, matter of factly. "Will we be able to pay off the mortgage on this house?"

"This house? Part of the estate in Detroit is the Leeds mansion with twelve bathrooms!"

"That's ridiculous!" Emily said calmly. "We couldn't possibly use more than three. One bathroom for you and me, one for Marion and one for Andrew and oh, yes, Milly would like her own. That's four."

Judge Hardy laughed and hugged her. "We'll lock the other eight up for company."

A little frantic, Marion spoke up, the corner drug store a moment later.

"We can just keep this quinine as a souvenir," she said when she heard the news. "I'm awfully happy for you James." She hesitated. Would it be an imposition if I went to Detroit with you? I can afford it. I've got four thousand dollars invested... of rather that you invested for me."

The Judge smiled.

"Milly Forrest," he said with pseudo-severity. "You are not a sister in law, or an aunt; you're a vital part of this family. Don't you ever forget that."

Anticipation of the new world before them had filled the minds had not been discovered. Philip, on hearing of the family arrival, hurried to the swanky apartment of Consuela McNish. Inasmuch as Philip was showering her with attentions she was greatly interested in the disposal of the Leeds' fortune.

"I've got a hunch!" he said excitedly. "And if I'm right, you'll be the only chorus girl in the city with two cable coats! I'm going to introduce myself and pretend to be friendly. To carry out my idea, I'll have to do some delicate work on the daughter. And you... on young Mr. Andrew Hardy." He puts his arms around her. "And if my scheme works out, the dear old Judge will find himself in... jail!"

When the family sat down for their first meal in the new home, only Milly was absent.

"I'm sure she'll be here soon," the Judge said. "Well, folks, how does Detroit compare with Carver?"

"Detroit's like heaven!" Marion said with enthusiasm.

"I can't understand how I managed to get along in a small town all my life. Andy said seriously. "And I'm all worn out!" Emily said. "Seems to me I've been in every store in town."

"You frighten me, mother," smiled the Judge. "When do the trucks start driving up with your purchases?"

"Oh, I didn't buy anything except an iron frying pan," Emily said blandly. "I've been trying to find an old-fashioned frying pan for six years. Now I'll be able to fry a decent piece of steak."

The Judge smiled. "It all goes back to my great-grandfather Colonel James Standish Leeds. You must remember my mentioning him, Andrew, the gallant soldier of the War of 1812. Here's the letter telling about it..."

The Judge hurried on. "Do you realize how much money two of the Hardy's; all during the air plane ride to Detroit. Seated side by side, James and Emily remained outwary calm; inwardly each exulted in the miracle that they felt that they had so richly earned during the thirty happy years of married life that lay behind them. And Milly had become acquainted with a good-looking middle-aged man, whom Emily suspected of harboring romantic intentions.

The luxurious magnificence of the Leeds mansion, the lavish entrance hall and arched drawing room had stunned the Hardy into speechlessness for a long moment. Servants appeared out of nowhere to take their luggage. Andy's eyes nearly popped out of his head, and Marion was lost in the wonder of it all.

"Call me at the office when you're ready," said Mr. Bronell, the lawyer who welcomed them. "I'm going over your papers at once. Judge, and if they're as you say, which I don't doubt; you can officially claim the estate."

To welcome the Hardys to Detroit one person who was not eager was Phillip Wescott, the late Mr. Leeds adopted son, and the heir presumptive if the Hardys lineage

By WILLIS B. RENSIE

Mrs. Hardy beamed delightedly. "Milly, dear," she cried, happily.

As Andy rose from the table with a whoop, a pack of cigarettes fell to the floor. Only Judge Hardy noticed it and he frowned. He turned away as Andy discovered his loss, pretending not to notice anything as Andy furiously pocketed the package. As the family exulted about Milly's forthcoming date, Judge Hardy rose.

"Andy," he said with pretended lightness. "I'd like to talk you you. In the library alone."

In the library, Andy, a little nonplussed over this sudden "conference," wondered what he had done wrong now.

"Stand up," the Judge said suddenly.

"I am standing," was the astonished reply. "Do I look like I'm sitting down?"

"I mean stand up straight against the wall. Don't slouch."

Frightened now, Andy obeyed with alacrity. The Judge picked up a ruler and approached the boy, as Andy stared...

"Say, Pop, are you all right? How about some aspirin?" he said cautiously.

"Keep your head up," the Judge ordered.

Definitely convinced now that something was wrong with his father, Andy attempted to humor him...

"Oh, I get it," he said brightly, "you want to play William Tell—going to shoot the apple off my head." He laughed in hollow fashion. "Heh, heh, lot of fun."

The Judge smiled. "Nothing to worry about. I just want to see how tall you are."

Andy sighed with relief. Marking the boy's height on the wall with a pencil, the Judge then measured up to it with the ruler. "Heh, heh, lot of fun."

"Five foot two's okay, isn't it?" he said proudly.

The Judge appeared to be worried. "Humph! was he muttered. "This is the most amazing thing I've ever seen!"

"What's the matter?" Andy demanded.

"Let's see now," the Judge brought out a little notebook. "I have all the measurements of you children somewhere. Oh, yes, here it is. Six months ago; Shoes seven; collar, fourteen; hat, six and

THE GARDEN

This week is to be dealt with a list of minor vegetables, rather than those discussing does not need a full article. They are early beets, carrots, sweet corn and beans.

Beets and Carrots. — Both, root crops, these can be described together. The soil should be fine and friable, so that smooth roots may result. Fertility should be balanced, too much nitrogen as in fresh manure will cause them to "grow to top." If manure is used, it should be balanced with superphosphate, or, if there is any doubt of fertility with high-grade fertilizer, as 4-8-6 or 5-10-5. Superphosphate should be broadcast, 1 pound to each 50 square feet of space, or sown where the rows are to be in a ribbon 12 inches wide, 1 pound per 50 feet. Complete fertilization should be used in the same way, but at double these rates.

Seed should be sown in early April, in drills from 12 to 24 inches apart, 1 ounce of seed to 50 feet of row. Covering should be no deeper than 1.2 inch. Seedlings in each case should be thinned to stand 1-2 inches.

The best early beet is Crosby's Egyptian, and the carrot to use is Chantenay, for although this variety is a bit behind Early Orange or other extremely early ones, its shapeliness and color recommend it. Also, it is a splendid winter-keeper, so in May, after which the weather and the soil become so warm, carrot seed sprouts with uncertainty.

Sweet Corn. — Corn land must be rich, for to grow good corn, water is good to use, but better balance with superphosphate, or a complete fertilizer at rates given.

The very early variety of semi-sweet corn is Early Adams, but sweet corn should use Black Mexican. Next in season, and for crossing ears, is Pearl or Louisville market or Paducah market may be used. For really sweet corn, the new white Aunt Mary's or Stowell's Evergreen should be selected. Dr. Price pointed out Total supplies of the dark tobacco probably will be even smaller in 1939-40 than in the present season. It is reasonable to believe, he adds, "that the average quality of the new crops will turn out superior to the lower average of the fire-cured and dark air-cured produced in 1938."

Beans—Even though beans are considered a "warm crop," the venture will pay to make the first planting by mid-April, using Red Valentine or Tennessee Greendrop. The land should be somewhat over-manured, for beans respond to too rich conditions by making splendid vines but setting few beans. It is always well to supply phosphorus in superphosphate, as suggested above, or the same general fertilization previously recommended. The seed bed should be deep and well-prepared. The seed is sown in drills 24 to 36 inches apart, using 1 pound to 50 feet.

Beans, like corn, should be harvested at their prime. For that reason, successive plantings should be made bi-monthly, for average purpose 10 feet per bed, and should be planted each time. Beginning in May, the better stringless varieties, Stringless Greendrop or Full Measure, should be used. In later plantings in June and July should be double those previously to provide canning surpluses.

QUALITY PAINTS
In buying exterior house paints, Prof. J. B. Kelley of the agricultural engineering department of the Kentucky College of Agriculture suggests two things:

1. Buy a high-quality prepared paint or else a lead and oil paint mixed by a competent painter.

2. Use the same kind of paint every year; for instance, do not use one kind one year, and the next a paint containing a different mixture as this may cause cracking, peeling and other bad results.

Experienced painters may prefer a paint paste because they can prepare undercoats and prime exactly the right mix is a difficult job for the amateur. Also, pastes usually come in white so that the user has to be tinting himself. Not only is this hard, but if the first batch runs out it is almost impossible for the amateur to get exactly the same tint a second time.

As to thinners, Prof. Kelley says turpentine remains the best for home painting. Water never should be used for thinning.

Prof. Kelley offers the reminder that paint companies sell cheap, inferior paints, and also high quality products sold at a higher price. The user get what he pays for, and it

TOBACCO SITUATION EXPECTED TO REMAIN ABOUT LIKE 1938-39

Tobacco growers probably will see their 1939 crops under demand conditions about the same as prevailing during the 1938-39 marketing season, in the opinion of Dr. H. B. Priest, director of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture.

According to the spring outlook report on tobacco, issued by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Economics, the prospects are for stable or moderately improved general business conditions throughout the remainder of 1939, and for a continuation of the present high level of cigarette consumption if no Burley growers report prospects for a decrease of a little more than 3 percent in their 1939 plantings, compared with the 1938 acreage. "Assuming a five-year average yield," Dr. Price said, "the crop yield for the 1939 burley crop may be about the same as for the 1938 crop. Burley stocks on hand at the close of the season should show a slight increase over a year earlier."

Again quoting from the outlook report, Dr. Price said that the burley outlook favors about the same or slightly larger domestic consumption of cigarettes and smoking mixtures in the 1939-40 season, and demand for the 1939 burley crop may be about the same as for the 1938 production. A large proportion of the 1938 crop consisted of smoking grades which brought higher prices relative to burley on the heavy side than in previous years.

The fire-cured acreage for 1939 is indicated at about 12 percent less than in 1938. Growers of dark air cured tobacco report intentions to reduce their plantings this year about 11 percent. With the outlook favors about the same or slightly larger domestic consumption of cigarettes and smoking mixtures in the 1939-40 season, and demand for the 1939 burley crop may be about the same as for the 1938 production. A large proportion of the 1938 crop consisted of smoking grades which brought higher prices relative to burley on the heavy side than in previous years.

These smaller acreages of dark types appear about in line with the downward trend in the demand and supply of burley tobacco. Dr. Price pointed out Total supplies of the dark tobacco probably will be even smaller in 1939-40 than in the present season. It is reasonable to believe, he adds, "that the average quality of the new crops will turn out superior to the lower average of the fire-cured and dark air-cured produced in 1938."

HOME CONVENIENCES INCREASE IN NUMBER
An increase in the number of household conveniences has resulted from home demonstration work in Ballard County, Kentucky, according to a survey made by Mary Lou Jackson, county home agent. She found 151 farm homes with electricity, 195, running water, 58, telephones, 185 radios, 195, sanitary fixtures, 225 pumps. Only 25 had washing machines. Eighty-two of the women interviewed did automobiles, 75 make their clothes and 37 the clothes of their children, while 97 buy their clothes.

HOW TO CONTROL TOBACCO INSECTS
Recommendations for the control of tobacco insects, as made by a joint committee of representatives of tobacco states and the United States Department of Agriculture, are given in a new circular of the Kentucky College of Agriculture. Insects for which control are prescribed include the beetle, horn worms, black European slug, cutworms, grasshoppers, budworms, green June beetle larva and sod webworms. The committee was made up of men from Kentucky, Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Virginia, Pennsylvania, Florida, Connecticut and the Department of Agriculture.

GROW FLOWERS IN VEGETABLE GARDEN

To save time and care in growing flowers around the farm home, many families find it practical to grow at least a part of their annual flowering plants in rows in the vegetable garden.

In vegetable gardening, the use of Ellagit of the Kentucky College of Agriculture points out that it is often a wiser saver to fill most of the spaces reserved for flowers with plantings of small shrubs, and long lived plants such as irises, peonies, daffodils, daylilies, columbine, cornucopia and gailiards.

Other plants that go well in permanent flower beds are those that usually reseed year after year, such as hollyhocks, penstems, shasta daisies, larkspur and cosmos. With these it is only necessary to hoe out surplus plants after cultivation has been delayed long enough to give the scattered seed a chance to sprout.

Many of the favorite annual flowers, such as zinnias, marigolds, calliopsis, verbenas, sweet peas and scabiosa, can be planted in rows like vegetables, convenient for cultivation, easy in the garden. Many of the annuals bloom most freely and for the longest period if kept clean, picked and not allowed to ripen seed. If these are planted in the vegetable garden, it is easy to gather a wealth of fine flowers without injuring the display in the flower beds and border plantings around the house.

"Unaware that the judge was exaggerating for his own purpose, Andy was very much bewildered. You mean, I'm getting—shorter?" he cried.

"You've lost five-eighths of an inch!" the judge said gravely. "Maybe I'm spreading out," Andy suggested with desperation. "Don't I look wider?"

His father surveyed him thoughtfully and shook his head. "Narrower, if anything," he replied sadly. "Andy groaned. "After all these years, I've got to start to shrink! Can't you think of some thing we can do?"

"When we get back to Carvel, we'll have Doc Jones give you a good looking over."

Judge Heintz smiled to himself as Andy trudged out in the hall as he met Aunt Milly. He stopped her.

"Of course, Andy. I'd be proud. You know everything, being a school teacher. Just where cultivation me does smoking cigarettes stunt your growth?"

Placed in so delicate a situation, Milly rolled her eyes. The hands of Agriculture points out that it is often a wiser saver to fill most of the spaces reserved for flowers with plantings of small shrubs, and long lived plants such as irises, peonies, daffodils, daylilies, columbine, cornucopia and gailiards.
