PRACTICE TEACHING IS HELP TO TEACHERS

A report is given below from the practice teachers at the State Branch School.

Practice teaching in the rural school has helped me in many ways. It has given me an opportunity to go out to teach and to see how my own work is being done. I have learned a great deal about the work of a teacher and about the work of a principal. I have also learned a great deal about the work of a parent and about the work of a community. I have also learned a great deal about the work of a school and about the work of a district.

This experience is really worth while because you are doing just about what you will have to do in your own school. This kind of experience in the rural school is what the practice teachers really need when they are first starting. They can then carry what they have learned back and use it in their own schools. I have learned how to keep other people's work in mind and how to help them. I have learned how to carry out a plan and how to see it through. I have learned how to work with a group and how to help them. I have learned how to be a leader and how to be a follower. I have learned how to be a team player and how to be a winner.

ISLAND FORK SCHOOL

Katherine Jackson, Caudill

UPPER LICK FORK

Hubert Pennington, teacher
Upper Lick Fork School opened Monday, July 24, with 35 children present. The crowd of last year gave four new faces in its midst. Three new young, tender faces are forcing their way into the school room activities, and the fourth is a fourth grade pupil that moved in to Upper Lick Fork, from Oak Grove. The old students are giving the new students a friendly welcome in all the playground activities. Many of the patrons have visited our school. We extend a hearty welcome to those who have visited us and hope they will do so in the very near future. Pictures, pamphlets, rock collection and several new games give the children plenty to enjoy them selves with, at leisure periods.

Stories May Now Be Told To Public

The following morning, Everything was lost, just as they were alive and together, and they were grateful.

At the Red Cross Center they had good food and comfortable beds which helped to relieve the strain of that night of horrors. When they realized consciousness of the significance of their loss, dawned upon them. They no longer had a house, a garden, any furniture, and no clothes. The cow, the chickens, and the ten pigs which Tom prized so highly were drowned.

For the past three years Mrs. C. and her husband and son lived in the home which was destroyed. A second son, living away from home, contributed a small amount to the upkeep of the family. Occasionally Tom would sell a pig and although only a school boy of 11 he buys his own necessities. He is very independent but he is not the loss of his farming power.

The house that had been reduced to splinters would had been built with the money that Mrs. C. had saved over the years, whenever he could make extra money for building material. One month before the flood Mr. C. had paid for the house and it was free from any encumbrance. Would they ever have a home again?

The Red Cross recognized the need of this family to live a normal family life, just as they had done before the flood. They had been victims of a catastrophe over which they had no control and thus the Red Cross had a responsibility to help with this family for the future.

What were they doing for the future? Mr. C. and Mrs. C. and Tom, they would be back in a home of their own. They were wondering how they would get furniture, house, and clothes. They needed clothing. As to the house which went down the stream on the last bill for the house and they found rooms, the Red Cross gave the furniture. They needed clothes, the Red Cross supplied them. These emergency needs met the family was comfortable. Then the Red Cross Worker substituted the fact that Mr. and Mrs. C. owned the property that could be proven by public records. There was no indebtedness upon it, therefore it was their very own.

The worker also proved to her satisfaction that the family had no debts upon which they could stand upon which they could stand to build another house. This is small salary, often very uncertain, supplemented on occasions by his son, living in another city, was all that Mr. C. could depend on. He had no savings or automobile as drifted apart.

do many people living in his neighborhood. These facts convinced the worker that he could never build again, at least not for a very long time, unless he could be helped with materials to do so.

When the family told the worker how very much they wanted a home of their own, the building advisor was called upon to give an estimate of the amount necessary to rebuild, based on the plans of the project which had been approved. The man was a carpenter, he wanted to furnish the labor to build the house just as he had done three years ago. The material to rebuild was furnished by the American Red Cross and the new building is now in process of reconstruction.

Only one important loss remained for consideration. It was so important to Tom—the pigs that he had raised with such scientific care—the pigs that were his first concern when death hovered over him and even his own life was in danger.

The worker talked the matter over with Tom's mother. The boy was not over a year old, he had many years, whenever he could make extra money for building material. One month before the flood Mr. C. had paid for the house and it was free from any encumbrance. Would they ever have a home again?

The Red Cross recognized the need of this family to live a normal family life, just as they had done before the flood. They had been victims of a catastrophe over which they had no control and thus the Red Cross had a responsibility to help with this family for the future.

This is small salary, often very uncertain, supplemented on occasions by his son, living in another city, was all that Mr. C. could depend on. He had no savings or automobile as drifted apart.

The only surviving member of the family, the little boy in whom the American Red Cross is so interested, described his experience by telling how he was dragged by the water, held his breath, then rose to the surface. "I caught to the limb of a tree. It broke because I was so heavy. Then I sank again, but I remembered to hold my breath and I again came to the surface. This time I caught on a strong limb which could support me, so I limber up and up as high as I could and just held on tight. From where I sat I could hear my mother and my sister screaming and praying for me. Every few seconds were very loud, then they grew dimmer and soon they died away entirely. I sat there for a long long time until it grew light and someone came and rescued me."

In a very modest cottage lived Mrs. B. and her two children Mary and Johnny. She had the responsibility of making a living for her husband had deserted her. It was a very poor home, but there was a strong attachment between the members of this family group. This attachment was particularly strong between Johnny and his sister Mary. Everywhere they went he carried her and everything he did, she enjoyed doing. They were very fond of each other. They were very interested in Johnny's youngsters and the sister being the young thought of him as the little young, interesting boy is entitled to the action of the Democratic party at the August 5 primary.

The Youth in Business

By C. E. Johnston Dean, School of Business Administration, Morehead State University

"Do not sell yourself short! An excellent advice for the young man entering the business world. Many persons who possess the necessary mental and physical equipment fail to achieve success because they continually create a poor impression. Personal habits and appearance are of great importance both in obtaining a job and in securing advancement once a position is obtained. Learn to create a good impression by checking up on yourself at certain intervals. Ask yourself questions such as the following: 1. Do I appear neat and clean? 2. Do I have a friendly smile? 3. Do I have a firm handshake? 4. Do I have a good posture? 5. Am I alert and attentive? 6. Do I always call the right name? 7. Do I dress appropriately? 8. Do I have a good reputation? 9. Do I have any personal habits which might cause me to be regarded as a poor specimen?"

Mr. Seymour was living at the home of Curt Hutchinson on Hill Road Street the night of the flood. He had gone to bed, removing his clothing and turning his pajamas when the wind came to get out. The water was coming. Pop zipped his work clothes, tossed his pajamas and slipped out of the bed and with the Hutchinson family made its way up the street to the new home of Curt's father, Roscoe Hutchinson on Fifth Avenue. Here they could relax and take up their lives. When the wind came to get out, the water was coming.
