Bluejacket Class Gets Ratings At Navy Exercises

Fifth Group Of Trainees Leave Morrhead After Three Weeks Here

A fifth group of trainees completed their sixteen weeks course in electrical training at the Morrhead Navy Training School, with final graduation exercises in the gymnasium last Tuesday night. Of the one hundred twenty-eight in the division, which was known as First Division, one hundred eleven were given ratings as electricians' mates, third class.

U. S. Commander Walker, captain of the Morrhead Navy unit, congratulated the graduates on the high quality of their work. "You made a very creditable record here in this school," he told the Bluejackets, "and you certainly put yourselves into the hard work."

The trainees were given "have every reason to believe that you did a very good job of it," said the commander in his closing message. "This message that teachers in the college and navy have found a common ground to meet on and are achieving excellent results."

L. Comrade, Walker added that they were "done by the officers in this school in evidence in the quotas of the Morrhead Navy unit, are selected for advanced training at other Navy schools, and who are expected to do creditable work in their new fields."

Prior to the presentation of ratings, the trainees were given a review of the Navy regulations book, which was given to each trainee. "Don't go out of here with the impression that you are being warned," U. S. Commander Walker said, "you are given brief instructions on the regulations book, and you are to try to put that into practice. You are to keep your ship, you're going to wonder what it is all about, follow on the ship when something comes up, and the graduating class will be given a review of the regulations book, which you remember that your major responsibility is to keep the ship in good condition. Any carelessness anywhere in the ship will be your fault."

Graduates Have High Grades

The graduates were given ratings, the five highest for the ten weeks of the course. The graduates were: Donald Metzger, 85.42; William Wild, 85.38; John Davidson, 84.32; Carl Erickson, 84.32; and John Davidson, 84.32.

Cooks And Bakers In Class

Four Bluejackets who have had sixteen weeks of work under the supervision of Miss Martha Cleveland, director of the college cafeteria, were also graduated at the ceremonies last Tuesday night. The three who received ratings will go on board ship as cooks or bakers, third class.

Start Remarks

Mr. Jesse Stuart, Kentucky poet and author, was guest speaker of the evening at the graduation program, and entertained the audience with accounts of his experiences in Europe under the subject of "What Makes Up a Country." Lieutenant Emil Calhoun of the ship's executive staff introduced the speaker, who is nationally known for his sketches of native Kentucky life, and who traveled abroad as a recipient of the Guggenheim scholarship several years ago.

Address Made In Class

One Kentucky resident, Malcolm Norris of Ashland, was among the sailors who were awarded ratings as third class electricians. Norris formerly attended Morehead College as a freshman; he is also a brother-in-law of the speaker of the evening.

Shipped Out Immediately

The First Division men were shipped out for their new stations within a few days after graduation. A large number were sent to training centers along the Atlantic coast, where they will be assigned to ships of the United States fleet, and others were selected for advanced schools in amphibious training, submarine warfare, teletype, and cryptography. A majority of the men received delayed orders from their new stations, and were allowed several days' leave before reporting for duty.

A new group of one-hundred fifty bluejackets, who will compose their Third First Division to study electricity on the Morehead College campus, have arrived here from basic training camp of the Navy and will begin their sixteen weeks work Monday.
