The Haldeman Littlelens represent the fact that the News called them the Haldeman Babes in the story of their game last week. We wish to explain that the only reason we called them Babes was that babes was the only word that fits in the line that this week we promise to call them Littlelens and the Breck boys Babes just to even things up a bit.

Joe Bates Works To Help Retain Rodburn Camp

Letter From Congressman States He Is Vitrally Interested In Camp

A letter from Hon. Joe B. Bates, Congressman from the Eighth Kentucky District, states that he is doing everything in his power to insure the CCC camp at Morehead, although he is not at all optimistic as to his ability to do so. Working in conjunction with other congressmen and the Senators from Kentucky as well as from other states, he is accumulating as much evidence as possible for reasons why the camp should be maintained.

Mr. Bates' letter to the News was in acknowledgment of a telephone conversation and a letter to him setting forth some of the reasons we believed the Morehead camp should be retained. He stated that he believed the information given him would be of great assistance in retaining the camp and in permitting him to place the needs of the situation before the congress in an effective way.

It is wished the News to assure the citizens that by leaving no stone unturned to help the citizens of Rowan county retain the camp.

Local Man Makes Good Showing In First Entry In State Dog Contest

Morehead dog trainers, and Morehead dogs, are stepping up to the front. Mr. Helwig is mighty proud of that third place, considering that it was the first time he had entered the trials and that he had some of the stiffest competition in the entire state to go up against.

Drive For Fund Nets 200 Dollars

Morehead Section Not Complete; Is Expected To Boost Total Amount

With returns from out in the county indicating that the rural sections had more than exceeded their quota, the Morehead drive for funds for the Crippled children will continue in this county until April 15, when the final checkup will be made, according to Prof. C. O. Platt, chairman of the drive.

Plans already turned in give a grand total of $200 for the fund, which is considered excellent. However much of this sum came from sources outside of Morehead, while the city total fell below expectations. A number of civic organizations have not yet reported and it is hoped that complete reports will be published at the close of the local drive.

If you have not yet purchased your seals, the committee urges you to do so, and to go your part to help build this fund so important to the crippled children of Kentucky.

County To Be Divided In Five Parts

Text Of Law Published For Information Of Voters And Citizens

Because the Times has had so many inquiries about the newly passed and approved law governing the election of County Board of Education members, we have obtained a copy of the law and are publishing it below. For the past several years, Board of Education members were elected from the county at large, without regard to the district or the section of the county from which they came. Thus it was possible, although it has not been done in Elliott county, to elect all the board members from one section of the county.

This law has been changed, and while it is not likely to effect Rowan county to any extent, many new changes in the law, and we are publishing it below, for their information.

The scream hit of the season was presented at the College auditorium on Thursday night of last week, when the men of Morehead and Rowan county, proved to the awaiting world that they are possessed of histrionic ability that has long lain dormant, and needed but the incentive of an enthusiastic audience, etc, to bring it to the fore with a vengeance.

Hollywood scouts would have done well to have attended the show the "Womanless Wedding" the Rowan County Women's staged under the auspices of Club last Thursday night.

William Layne as Mae West, W. H. Rice as the blushing bride, Woody Hinton as Charles Chaplin, O. P. Carr as Eleanor Roosevelt and C. P. Caudill as Franklin D. took the house by storm.

Incidentally, and only incidentally the club cleared the net sum of $75.00 for their efforts. The money will be used for club purposes.

Tax Payers League Notified To Present Arguments And Plans To Take Care Of County Finances At That Meeting; Final Settlement To Be Made At This Meet

The Refinancing of the Rowan County indebtedness, which has been under consideration for several months, is again in the forefront for consideration with the expiration of the ninety day period voted by the fiscal court, during which the Tax Payers League might work out a plan to take care of the finances of the county by some other means.

A. J. Seymour Is Supervising Work Of N. Y. A. Boys Laying Sidewalks

Monday morning of this week under the supervision of A. J. Seymour, "Pop" to everybody in Morehead, the local N. Y. A. boys in various parts of the city where they are needed. The cost of materials is defrayed by the property owner, while labor costs are paid by the federal government.

In the last issue of the News the article submitted by the local N. Y. A. and the City Clerk were too late for complete insertion. Part of the article was published last week but the balance is continued in this issue.

It follows:

The actual cost to the property owners will be 18c a lined foot for a standard four foot sidewalk. In other words a sidewalk on a lot with a 100 foot front will cost approximately $18.

The property owner's expense is that he must furnish the sand, gravel and cement and have it at the job at the time of the survey. The City Clerk will be in charge of the material. Each property owner, making application for the sidewalks will be notified about one week in advance of the date that he should have these materials on the job. The materials may be purchased by the property owner at any place he desires but they must be approved materials. The property owners will be notified how much of each material they will be required to furnish.

Materials On Hand

The services of the city engineer, W. H. Rice, will be granted at no cost to the property owners without any cost, Mayor Seymour.

Romance Off The Rails

When she made that announcement she was looking straight into Bob's eyes. With that searching look of hers, Bob thought he caught something else a faint something that had in it both defiance and a dare. It brought that queer, painful ecstasy keeping into his breast again.

The next moment, however, he subdued it, with a feeling of guilt. He was letting her make a fool of him, this girl engaged to Rush Lowe.

"No, Miss McCormick," Bob answered her bitingly. "I didn't know you were fixing to marry Lowe, but you ought to make a right good team. I reckon he sent you here to wreck this train."

"I did not wreck the train," she said, and she turned away. "And I don't know who did."

A strange girl, with a rifle on her shoulder. Deep water, out here on the desert where water never ran at all. A woman any man in the world would be proud to claim—going to marry Rush Lowe?

That thought tortured Bob all through the remainder of his track. It still beat through his brain when, after five o'clock, he took up his depleted herd.

The longer he rode away from that wreck, though, the more Bob felt that he had been too hasty about quitting it. All evidence said that Virginia McCormick had caused it. Yet Virginia

McCormick couldn't do a thing like that. But Rush Lowe could, and she was going to marry him. "Keep on, a-slowin' 'em boys," he told his crew. "Bill might come on. I'm goin' back to that wreck."

Back on the scene of the wreck, he searched the track alongside the derailed train, and then circled again and again about it in a widening search. But too many people had been over the ground by now, including a railroad detective by the name of Talbot. The detective was a long, bulging-eyed fellow who stood around like a souly country boy, and sniffed at the air sometimes when he seemed most puzzled.

"How was it done?" Bob finally asked the railroad dick. "Lose rail, like you first said, the man quipped. Then Talbot fired a question of his own at Bob. "Why'd you let that girl loose?"

"Because," and Bob amazed himself with the answer, "I don't think she's the one you want."

"Why not?" "You caught her rehanding on the job," Bob agreed. "But somehow it don't just fit. This wreck and Virginia McCormick."

"You know her?" "Yes, since—well, for about thirty days."

Detective Talbot sniffed and walked off. He went up the track and stood looking back at the wreck. Then once more he came back and studied the rail that had sprung when the engine drivers hit it. He got down on his knees and looked for a full minute. Then he got up and faced Bob.

"She's the one," he said. "How'd you make that out?" Bob asked, a sudden lightning in his throat.

"I'll tell that in court," Talbot exhaled. "Want to go under your work and fetch her in under jail, or do I have to get the sheriff and go after her?"

"I think," Bob answered, "I'll better watch out they don't fetch her in. I got a feelin' that I've been made quite a sucker, even if water is the scarest thing out here on these hot sands."

That conclusion, once given, grew rapidly on Bob. Every fact supported it. Yet the face of the girl, with her honest blue eyes, kept coming up before him to deny, every fact and keep his head in unhappy turmoil. A faint, heavy desire, he formed a heavy dislike for Detective Talbot.

"But of course, he's right. Bob vowed to himself over and over. "What else was she doing when the train hit the unspiked rail?"

He got back to his outfit at his cowboys were trying to get the restless herd bedded down. Bob knew he was not going to sleep. He took the first guard, but had no heart to sing to the cattle as he should have, a man's voice would've lent assurance to the uneasy herd.

When he was relieved he went back to his blankets. He lay awake for hours. To his ears came the easy, steady singing of Frosty Smith, off there with the herd. Bob felt asleep and still Virginia McCormick tormented him in dreams. And he was reaching out his arms for her, pulling her to him—only to come awake and spring up with his elbow and look around.

"You damn fool!" he called himself, and lay back down. All the next day they pushed the cattle along. That night they made another dry camp. Half way up to the pass, the trail would desert the rocky canyon and break out onto a mesa, and at the far side of that mesa was a big dirt tank where the Double Rafter cattle would get their first drink. There was grass there, too, so the stock could feed up a little.

"I'm ridin' ahead," Bob told young Frosty Smith. "You keep the cattle on the move." "I think," Bob answered, "I'll better watch out they don't pick you outa the saddle," warned the white-headed Frosty. "They'll likely try a bigger job of it." Bob answered, "and try to keep us from waterin' at the mesa tank. I figures, any way, a little look-see there about time won't hurt much."

If the Gray Horse clique meant to make a second attempt to keep Bob out of the mesa tank, Rush Lowe owned the tank, and although against all fair custom of the cow country, he could forbid Bob to water there. But Bob had to water the cattle at that tank, and when he tried it, Lowe would be within the law technically in resisting him with arms.

Bob held to the trail when he broke out on top of the mesa, and rode straight for the tank, which was back against the foot of the mountain a mile away. As he neared the watering place a man stood up on the tank rim. A big man with a certain vigidity and bearing, although he was young. Rush Lowe. Product of Gray Horse basin by birth, yet by natural endowments a man who could hold his head up in most company. It was only natural that he and Virginia McCormick would look out head and shoulders above the other young people of the Gray Horse basin.

Lowe waited until Bob was within short rifle range. Still he did not speak.

Bob opened the conversation with, "Well, here you are, just as I looked for."

"You're mighty right," Love shot back, and his voice was deep and rumbling. "I'll defend my property against any outsiders, especially you."

"Puttin' the law on your side pretty slick," Bob said. "Well, I'm waterin' my stock here, law or no law."

"You might still change your mind," said Lowe. "Boys, step up, let him come nesses on you. Eight men arose from the inside slope of the dirt tank. With them came Virginia. Bob sat his horse in speechless surprise.

Regardless of all he had accused the girl of, he had not expected to see her look up thus with these belligerent men.

"Well," Bob at last called, "I have only five men, but I still aim to water here. I'll pay for the privilege. Or fight for it if you make me. What is it?"

"We didn't come lookin' for chicken feed pay," Lowe retorted. "Our stand is Gray Horse basin for Gray Horse people, nothin' less."

"So be it," said Bob, turning his horse back the way he had come.

Virginia McCormick watched him go until Rush Lowe stalked up and cut her view off with his bulk. Rush was a handsome fellow, big from massive head and down. His face was sun-brown, full and hard. He had force and a will that no man could turn. For three years he had been telling Virginia she was going to marry him. In May he had returned after a six months absence, and forthwith set about making himself master of Gray Horse basin.

Virginia had admired his initiative and to herself she had said that he was the only man in this parrow world that she could think of taking for a husband. But somehow she had kept holding back the final word to Rush, putting him off a day at a time.

But just now she felt something repellent about him, a feeling so new it startled her. He had no fineness, was all force and cleverness. He was not what Bob Gilmore, she thought, And he made a fatal mistake now. He handed her a cartridge with his heavy forefinger on its tip. "870 bullet."

"Is me a favor, Glynn," he said. "Write his name on it about be located so they can't find it." "Gilmore's?" and her voice was very low.

STRESS PLACE OF POULTRY ON FARM

The place of chickens in farm living is stressed by J. E. Humphrey of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture. A flock large enough to furnish eggs and meat for the family saves in a year which means that it is recommended that at least five hens per member of the family be kept. Given good care, hens would lay 100 or more eggs in a year, which means that they would furnish an egg of five per person, for a family of five, and several dozen eggs set or sold.

According to the last census, chickens are kept on 90 percent of the 278,298 farms in Kentucky. Sixty-two percent of the farms have fewer than 20 chickens, and another 28 percent fewer than 100 chickens. This means that only 10 percent of the farms of the state have more than 100 chickens.

A child's best preparation to cope with modern life is to learn to be self-reliant, to be able to make his own decisions, and to assume responsibility for himself and others. Thus declares Mrs. Mary Mumford Van Cleave, in charge of the University of Kentucky nursery school, who adds: "A person who always has had his decisions made for him is in no position suddenly to assume responsibility as a partner in a home or as a citizen. For it is through a vigorous average person largely must make his own decisions, and learn to do so during the first 20 years of life."

Parents require sun and shade for their children, and provide it for at least half of the day. Soil for flowers should be

Select Committees

(Continued From Page One) The names of those who have been asked the question, Democratic committeemen are not elected until December of this year, after the presidential election in November.

Refunding Bonds

(Continued From Page One) Thus it was impossible for the local TAY Fayers committee to obtain a price or even a bid until the option already held expired. At any rate, the Fiscal Court is anxious to get the matter disposed of permanently at the April 16 meeting, and as announced, invites those interested to attend.

City Sidewalks

(Continued From Page One) Daugherty stated. An effort is being made, the Mayor said, to explain the project to all property owners through letters, but that was probably that some of them might not be on the mailing list and that additional applications blanks may be procured at the office of the City Clerk in the City Hall.

Further Information Available

Mr. Daugherty specifically set out that no property owner will be charged any except that he will be required to furnish the cement, sand and gravel on his job, the amount of which will be notified in advance. Where the work is finished there will be no coming back on the property owner with a bill or assessment.

Added Mail Service Sought

In places that do not now have paved streets curbs will be established so that if paved streets are constructed later the sidewalks will not be disturbed.

Postmaster W. E. Crutcher set out at the council's meeting that good, continuous sidewalks are a pre-requisite for free city delivery and parcel post delivery for which the Morehead postoffice has applied. He said that many sections, especially most of the newly annexed part of the city, do not have continuous sidewalks. There is no doubt but that, under the supervision of Mr. Seymour, both the city and private owners and the federal government will obtain value received for their investment, as he is an expert concrete man and a first class contractor. The News seldom takes this method of expressing approval of a movement, but in this case it is evident that both the city and the N. Y. A. are to be congratulated on their selection of a supervisor for this important project.

Cancer Control

(Continued From Page One) Cancer control depends on the cooperation of men and women everywhere, according to Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, First Lady of the Land, in a statement made public by Mrs. Harold Simpson, vice commander of the eighth district in the Woman's Field Army.

Mrs. Roosevelt's full statement follows: "The control of cancer—like so many other desirable goals—depends on the cooperation of men and women everywhere. The general public must participate as well as the trained physician and the research work-

It is through education that the Women's Field Army of the American Society of the Control of Cancer hopes to reduce mortality from this disease. Developed under the supervision of physicians who act as spokesmen for their state medical societies, this educational program seeks to teach the individual a few basic facts about cancer for his own protection and to enlist him in a movement for the protection of all.
