THE "blue ribbon brigade" at Morehead is increasing every day as the temperance revival continues. Men, women and children are taking the pledge, and the influential citizens have determined to rid their town of the liquor traffic. The only saloon there is run by Craig Tolliver's widow, and a subscription is being raised to buy her out on condition she betakes herself to other scenes. Peace, order and prosperity has taken the place of lawlessness, riot and bloodshed at Morehead.
