Inflation Will Effected Farm Incomes

Inflation is probably now the most dangerous threat to the economic well-being of the American people and the successful prosecution of the war. To meet this threat several measures are being taken or advocated by the government. Some of these, however, cannot come into operation immediately, and the success of some of the others will depend on the extent to which the people enter whole heartedly into the program and give it their support.

The danger of inflation arises mainly from the expenditure of huge sums for the weapons of war on the one hand, and a scarcity of goods civilians can buy on the other. People have more money to spend, and less to spend it for. Already a rise in wholesale and retail prices has been brought about. If permitted to continue, progressively rising prices would disrupt all normal price and income relationships. Life insurance policies, bonds, and saving accounts would become practically worthless; speculation and profiteering would become rampant; and confidence in the government would be undermined and its power to act will be crippled.

What can be done to avert inflation, a disaster which would be a defeat on the home front and would jeopardize and postpone victory on the battle front? Although the effects of inflation on individual commodities are complex, the basic reason or the upward spiral in price is simple. The gap between the spendable income and demand on the one hand, and the supply of goods available for purchase on the other. This being the case, the logical and direct means for combating inflation is to reduce the amount of money the people will have for spending, so that government expenditures for war purposes will be substituted for and not added to civilian demands. This means higher purchases of government bonds and higher taxes. Though this generally means lower standards of living it is demanded by the people as a necessary price which must be paid for military victory. Higher taxes and voluntary purchases of bonds will not however, take up all the billions of dollars which must be kept off the market for civilian goods. If inflation is to be prevented, furthermore, taxes cannot be collected as soon as they are levied. With other measures, therefore, there would be room for further inflationary price rises, and these would be stimulated by speculation and hoarding.

To meet this situation the Office of Price Administration of the United States Government the faculty of the school and the erstwhile neighbors of our community.

Maximum Price Regulation, putting a ceiling on wholesale and retail prices for most commodities, based on the highest prices charged during March, 1942. Exempted from the order are all raw and unprocessed agricultural products and certain other products although most commodities including agricultural products in a processed form are affected by the regulation. In addition individual commodities which are affected, and are particularly scarce, will be subject to rationing in order to make certain that each consumer secures his or her fair share. Restrictions on installment buying also tend to reduce the demand for civilian goods, and thus to hold down inflation.

These policies for reducing the amount of money available for spending, holding down prices, and rationing scarce commodities, are designed to guarantee to the American people that their living costs will remain stable, that their savings will be spared the losses and uncertainties associated with extreme inflation and subsequent deflation and that the maximum war effort may be achieved.

Because of the length of this article it will be continued in the next issue of the News.

Americans All

(Continued From Page One) Many and victory has perched on our banners at Victory must and will, it would be better for us, better for our men in the armed forces, better for our war effort, if it all took the attitude that the war would last for long years to come. It seems to us that we would then be better prepared to endure better grind for the day, develop a better morale, and contribute much more toward victory than we do by an optimistic view that can't possibly have a foundation in anything but wishful thinking.

The letters that follow are from some of the men who are scattered in all parts of the world, who if they could see you, would echo the thoughts and words above.

From William R. Jones

Dear Mother I will try to answer your letter which I received today. I sure was glad to hear from you all I had a letter from Ruth today. I am still getting along fine. I also received the paper I get a letter from you about every week. I also got the pictures you sent me, but I would like to have a larger one and a better one. I am sending you several enlarged pictures. I hope you like them. The large one is for you. Give one to grandmother. I hope you like them. My birth day present was very nice. I like it very much. You asked me if I get every thing you send me. Sure I get it. It just takes time. I'm still looking for my radio every day. Be sure to send it. Hope you received my check for this month. I had a nice letter from Jack and Nell. I'm sorry mother, I didn't get to send you something for Mother's Day but I was sure, thinking of you. I see Barker very often and he said to tell you all hello for him. Hope to hear from you again soon, with lots of love. William R. Jones

GREYHOUND
In normal times, every organization is thought of in terms of its normal function. With GREYHOUND, it is transportation... the means of carrying you from where you are to where you want to go... comfortably, dependably, inexpensively.

But in times like these, GREYHOUND assumes a much broader aspect: As the family car becomes an item to be preserved, GREYHOUND moves into the breach to play a dual role.

To its normal function as a carrier, it now contributes a service of incalculable value as a conservator of rubber, metals, and fuel! With greater carrying capacity per pound and per gallon of these precious elements, buses are in the forefront in the efforts toward national defense.

Carrying business men on trips, war-workers to jobs, selectees to induction centers, service men to camps and on furloughs, GREYHOUND is doing double duty on America's Highways to Victory!
