

THE ROWAN WAR.

Only Armed Men at Moorhead—Troops En Route—Prospects for a Battle.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 2.—The Evening Post special from Lexington says: The Post correspondent has just had an interview with a railroad man who came down on an accommodation train from Morehead this morning. He says the last of the women and children left town last night on a freight, and that there is now no one in Morehead save those who intend to engage in the fight if one takes place.

If any attack is made on the Logan guard it will be made before the arrival of the troops which were sent here with Winchester in the hands of the attacking party. The Loganites would have little show of holding out against them for any considerable time.

By reason of the heavy brush around Morehead, the Tolliverites could approach within easy range of every house in the town without being seen by the guard. If a fight occurs it will be a desperately bloody one. Troops from Frankfort passed through here at noon to-day for Morehead.

Maysville Daily Evening Bulletin, Maysville, Kentucky, US

August 02, 1887, Page 4

<https://newspaperarchive.com/other-articles-clipping-aug-02-1887-1979302/>