MRS. CORINNE BARROWS GUY MILES

Editor's Note.—Below appear two reader editorials written by students. The first presents the problems of the modern college world, the second tries to find an answer to some of these problems.)

THE QUESTION...

To hell with it all. What's the use of working, pushing yourself to achieve a goal that exists only in your mind? What does life hold for me or any other guy in this world? The hope of having a home, a wife and kids is another intangible dream, like a bubble before it bursts. It seems that hate, prejudice and lust have been rearing their ugly heads in conflict with these dreams for centuries. War, like you, ever the desire of a few for the power of life and death. Why ever, why?

Did you ever feel like you were ready to crack wide open, go on a binge, raving, screaming, crying out your denial of life as it is today.

I know, I know these things have happened before and our young men have risen to meet the challenge, the threat to our way of living, but can I?

Feeling sorry for myself: That's possible, but I'm not one to accept the so-called inevitable as calmly as others may. I feel like one being cheated, robbed of the power of mind and the courage to do it. I feel like a man who has been cheated of the power of mind and the courage to do it. I feel like a man who has been cheated of the power of mind and the courage to do it.

I'm a coward, I'm afraid to fight, to defend my country, family and loved ones? I'm afraid of dying for what I believe in; freedom, the common rights of men? I'm afraid to say: Here is my life, let it do with it what you may. I've lived a full life, let it do with it what you may. I've lived a full life, let it do with it what you may.

I'm tired, weary of this internal battle in which there appears no hope of the impossible. Wherever I go, whatever I do, I cry for peace, but there is no peace.

I'm not selfish. I have no illusions that it is only I who is involved in this hell, the damnable struggle. I realize that many people feel as I do, many must give more and more to the world, to the world, to the world.

I'm lacking in faith? I need God's guidance, prayer, a leaning on Him for strength to do my part? I pray for strength, the strength to throw off this mood of depression, this feeling of despair, this need to be replaced by the hope and faith which I have had, and lost, in all mankind. I am a young American, 1951.

THE ANSWER...

The dilemma of modern youth, when stripped of its enchanting covers (patriotism, allegiance, etc.) is not a pretty picture. The individual of today who takes himself and his life seriously in a position has never been before, because when he tries to reconcile the things which happen to him with no reason, he can find no correlation. It is mainly those who can honestly consider life a side show, a big joke, or an unhappy preparation for the hereafter who are able to replace it with the hope and faith which I have had, and lost, in all mankind. I am a young American, 1951.

The problem of the serious youth of today is his desire to see the meaning of himself as an individual. He feels that he is important and he feels that what he does is important, but on all sides he finds proof that it is not so. He discovers that he is merely one of millions whose very existence depends upon the desire of someone in one of the cups of the world. The individual may attempt to resolve it by identifying his aims with those of his nation. If he can believe in what his nation stands for, he can then give his efforts to defending the cause in which he believes. This may be as successful for the cause (destroy what he has) as it is distant and so unsteady just the fact that faith in such a cause is often belied by the contradictions, bungling, and confusion that is so often identified with national aims.

As has already been stated, a strong religious faith solves the problems for some. But, for many, a religious outlook which sees merely that life on earth is only a necessary evil as a step to Heaven does not satisfy, for if that be true the earth and its life are meaningless. If it is to be a religious matter, the individual must take seriously the thing in which the individual is naturally most interested—his life on earth.

There must be, then, a larger and more inclusive faith, a faith in man and in his humanity. There must be a faith which recognizes that God and man along with man's world. The individual is not likely to deny that man has the power to progress without limit if he is left in peace. Man has gained a vast knowledge of the physical world already and if he is speedy enough, may yet gain the same and understand the nature of himself and the world he lives in.

But, this does not explain the role of the individual. The individual must come to a realization that wisdom is possible for all of man. He must see that man does have, in his own mind, the ideas which will lead him to a better world. He must see that man does have, in his own mind, the ideas which will lead him to a better world. He must see that man does have, in his own mind, the ideas which will lead him to a better world.

Although the individual's role must be small, he does have a part. The terrible sentence of the Bible "Man is a fool, he is a fool, he is a fool" is the attitude of indifference which can destroy. We are our brother's keeper and the minute we cease being that we must lose all hope. The individual cannot and should not attempt to saddle himself with the responsibility of the world, cannot be everyone's keeper, but he can be his brother's, his neighbor's keeper. He can be in this his small way wherever he is, in the army or at home or elsewhere. He can then know that he is doing the thing which will lead him to a better world. He can then know that he is doing the thing which will lead him to a better world.

Letters To The Editor

Editor, The Trail Blazer
College Cafe Becomes
Home For Stray Pets

It is an odd, but commonly accepted, eccentricity of the American people that while they enjoy their meals at a designated place within their homes or restaurants each day, they are in the habit of feeding the family pet on the doorstep or in the backyard. Not that there is any prejudice or distinction evidenced here, but for reasons of sanitation. However, we have been taught, college is a place where people learn new tricks and ideas, and this reporter is glad to be able to report that Morehead State is no exception in this regard. We have no such thing as bigotry and prejudice. We have our dogs to eat in the cafeteria. That's fine, that's democratic, that's revolting and saves wash lines.

As the reporter finished his noon meal last Tuesday, he leaned back in his chair, lit a cigarette, and prepared to converse with other members of the party in an after-dinner manner. Suddenly, from across the table, came an exclamation which had dog over there licking those plates! Your reporter looked, and indeed he found a dog in the black and white reporter standing on his hind legs in a chair, parading the leftovers having a home air of a commiser.

Reminds the reporter of a time when a restaurant was closed because of some silly law about fur-bearing animals. The dog was barking and the waiter was trying to get it away. Maybe yours, next time.

Editor, The Trail Blazer:

We, the members of "The Court House Farmer" group, wish to express our appreciation to reporter Jesse Hogg for his article concerning our discussions and the group's activities.

On Friday, May 11, we had a meeting at the Court House Farmer group, which was held at the Court House Farmer group, which was held at the Court House Farmer group.

At five o'clock Friday morning, a sleepy-eyed group arrived at the bus, ready for the trip, only to find that they had to wait a few minutes longer for the two of the boys whose alarm clock didn't seem to be working right.

The first stop was in Ripley, Ohio, where the eager travelers had breakfast. (Do-mits were distributed.) From Ripley they continued on their way to Cincinnati.

While reading the Courier-Journal this evening I noticed an article accompanied by a picture of a group of young men. I recognized them as the members of the "Court House Farmer" group.

I became interested in this item and turned to the Lexington Herald-Leader for more information. I found an article accompanied by a picture of a group of young men. I recognized them as the members of the "Court House Farmer" group.

After the sight-seeing party had been divided into two groups the Brewery was thoroughly investigated. The tour was very interesting, but the weather was not so good. The tour was very interesting, but the weather was not so good.

On the evening of May 22 the Mystic Club held a special meeting. The purpose of this meeting was to discuss the results of the tour.

Joe Corbett was selected president. Barbara Bright, vice-president. Cozette Phillips, secretary. Bobby Hogen, treasurer, and Harry Welch, reporter.

The club now has twenty-five members. They are active and also a number of honorary members. Cheerleaders belong to the club and all basketball, basketball and football players are considered honorary members.

The last meeting of the year for Beta Chi Gamma, sponsored by Drs. Stoops, Owsley, and Dr. Chl Gamma, was held at the Court House Farmer group.

The meeting opened at seven o'clock, (college time) in room 101 of the Science Building. Members present at that time played games and related until enough members to form a quorum had arrived. The main business under taken in this special tribute to the club was the election of officers for the coming school year. Elected were the following: Clayton

Those new officers are: Kenneth Kluse, chairman; Elwood Kappo, vice-chairman; and Ethel Kappo, as secretary-treasurer. After the election, the business meeting was held and the society decided to go to Cincinnati.

At the regular weekly assembly held on Thursday, May 17, the Elementary Drama and Stage Methods classes presented the program. They gave five one-act plays which were to serve as their final examinations.

The classes were not allowed use of scenery or furniture in the presentation of these plays, since emphasis was placed on direction and performance. Only bare essentials were allowed in the furniture and properties line.

Costumes and make-up were not encouraged but left up to the discretion of each director. The selection of the plays was made as a result of the problems each was posed.

The plays and casts were as follows: "The Great Train Robbery," a pantomime, directed by Ray Niblo, cast: Gene Collins, Elwood Kappo, Fritz Holbrook; the nurse, Jackie Holbrook; the nurse, Margaret Stone; wardboys, Robert Powell, Charles Damron.

"The Answer"

By Maude McCurdy Welch
Martha knew something had happened when Timothy came home from St. Louis. She knew she had told her own good time. There were no secrets between them after 12 happy years of marriage.

She prepared his supper, but Timothy only had time to say "excuse me" before an urgent call came from Luther Barnes, asking him to come to the hospital.

Martha hurriedly took off her apron and climbed in the shabby taxi with him. She thought that while Timothy was a minister in charge of this small community in the Ozarks his home was often called on to act as a doctor.

Fortunately, he had gone through medical school.

The Barnes family lived way out in the hills. They found Sarah Barnes in terrible pain. "We must get her to a hospital at once," Tim told her, "but I'm afraid it's her appendix."

Luther turned pale. He was so stupid, he said he wouldn't let his wife be operated on when he wasn't going to leave home.

Sarah said weakly, "I want to go to the hospital."

Timothy told Martha to take pillows and a blanket and make a bed in the back of the car. When Timothy was ready to go, he told her to get in the car, Luther, he barked.

"She's not here," he protested. Timothy told her to get in the car, Luther, he barked.

The next day she was still dazed and ill. The operation was over, but she was still in grave danger.

Timothy went out to see Luther, to apologize, to try to make up for his part in the disaster. But Luther wouldn't let him in. He was in bed and going to stay away.

Timothy drove away sadly. He felt that he had failed to help these people, and often became discouraged.

"Why are you so worried, dear?" Martha asked him one day when he came from a visit to the doctor.

Timothy told her then what had happened. He had been in the church in St. Louis, not a big one, but with a much larger congregation.

Martha smiled. "That isn't important." Timothy told her that it was. He felt that he had failed to help these people, and often became discouraged.

Forest Fires

Decrease By 50 Per Cent

A decrease of 50 per cent in the number of forest fires in the Tygart Creek region of the Kentucky Division of Forestry was reported this week by Ranger P. E. Ruckel, with the Spring fire season coming to a close.

"The number of fires has decreased, along with the acreage," Ruckel declared. "In the past, sections far too many fires are still getting out of control. Most of the out-of-control fires are started in the woods, particularly by loafers."

Residents of the Carter-Green-up sections served by the Tygart Creek Ranger Station, cooperating, the ranger said, adding that a further decrease is anticipated.

NOT BOGS

This is the last time you lucky people will be seeing Len Den. Until you eagerly return to see the seed of higher education next year.

First of all, we wish to congratulate those who are graduating and sincerely hope that you college days at MSC will always prove worthy of your time and effort. (It didn't win any many games, we're sure you will agree that our boys certainly gave the opposing teams plenty of a run for their money.)

And have you heard about the Morehead street cleaner who got fired because he couldn't keep his pants on? Well, that's a joke. It's really a good thing that the boys of the school are so near over for a few of the boys who have been indulging in drink" rather heavily "couldn't last too many minutes" and then they came out on their tests while in that condition. Oh, what a life.

The coming of spring has brought together several new couples—have you noticed? The crowded benches are these beautiful nights! Ain't love grand!

Congratulations too to all the winners of the track meet. Maybe next year the boys will have a regular track field to display their talent on.

Time and space are limited so I will now say goodbye, farewell, to you all. Have a safe and a nice summer. Be seeing you...

Mrs. Lillian May Evans, of Arcadia, Calif., got a surprise when she looked up and saw her car following her into the market.

She had parked the auto on an incline. Apparently the brakes slipped. As Mrs. Evans walked through the door, the car rolled through the market's big plate glass window.

Urges Motorists To Care For Windshield Wipers

You must see danger to avoid it!

The National Safety Council made that statement today as part of its May campaign to "Check Your Car, Check Accidents."

One of the major check-points—often overlooked but vital to safety—is the condition of windshield wiper blades, the council said.

Motorists were urged to check not only the operation of the wipers, but also the effectiveness of the blades themselves. This depends on clear, clean glass, and on replacement of blades if necessary.

The importance of windshield smear as an accident cause cannot be measured accurately, the council pointed out, but the glare of a streaked or smeared windshield when the sun or approaching headlights strike it undoubtedly contributes to many mishaps.

Studies have shown the chief cause of windshield smear to be an oily film picked up from the exhausts of other vehicles and from the road surface, the council said. When a rain starts, dust and ordinary dirt are removed by the water and the squeegie action of the rubber blade, but the oily film remains to cause smear.

The film can be removed from the windshield by using wax free or oil-free cleaning solutions and clean wiping rags, but smear still will not be eliminated unless the wiper blade is thoroughly cleaned, too. A survey of cleaning methods at service stations has revealed that the blade is seldom given attention, although it is coated with the same residue of oil, bugs and dirt that is found on the glass. In addition to contributing to smear, the oily deposit on the blade eventually will deteriorate the live action of the rubber.
