D. B. LOGAN, who is running things in Rowan County now, "declares that he has a case against Taylor Young, Sen., as well as his sons. He says that Mr. Young has all along been demanding an investigation upon a specific charge and Mr. Logan will now offer him one with confident expectation of proving the charge."

Public Meeting at Morehead.

The public meeting at Morehead Wednesday was attended by about 500 of the best citizens of Rowan County. The crowd was addressed by D. B. Logan, leader of the Sheriff's posse, in which he was very plain in expressing the feeling existing against all men violating the law. Address was also made by Dr. O'Mahoney, of Lexington, which was heartily endorsed by all. Greene Nickels, a Rowan County lawyer, also addressed the crowd. The resolutions adopted were the same as heretofore mentioned. All is quiet in Rowan. There was also an article signed by all parties that attended the meeting to help protect the citizens, and about $70 was made up for the benefit of Dolph Madden, the man wounded in the late trouble.

In speaking of the meeting the correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer says: "The resolutions were adopted without a dissenting voice, the three or four hundred men, without distinction of party, heartily indorsing them. In the course of his speech D. B. Logan earnestly advised every body to make friends with his neighbor if they were not friendly, and not to take to the brush and shooting for a trifling cause, nor for any cause. He made the meeting pledge him to hunt to the death, if necessary, any man who should wreak vengeance upon any of those engaged in the war of June 21st. At the conclusion of the speaking the papers on which were written the resolutions were passed around among the audience and nearly three hundred signatures were obtained.

"Some of the men signing the said articles of agreement were white-haired old men, who had not been to town for nearly a year. The day was observed as a sort of a jubilee. Logan retained a firm grip with his volunteer police on the order of the city, and he controlled the whisky traffic with a firm hand and unbending will. The ladies came in from the country on horseback and went shopping with a freedom and safety from affront that they had not known in years. The merchants, in consequence, are doing a rushing business.

"Indeed, these gentlemen are now hopeful that Morehead will have a boom, and with peace secured become what she once promised to be—the most promising town between Lexington and Huntington."
