

Our Morehead correspondent discloses a horrid state of affairs in Rowan—a county that has become notorious for bloody deeds. When the troubles will end on one can foretell. Taylor Young has been here most of the time since Pelfrey revealed to him the plot to kill him. Mr. Young is now thoroughly convinced that it is unsafe for him to remain in Morehead, and he has decided to leave there and speaks of locating in this city. We think this a wise course in Mr. Young, for if he remains in Morehead he can have no peace of mind there; in any event we are of opinion that he can better his condition by living elsewhere.
