WING COMMANDER will be back at the Kentucky State Fair Horse Show, shooting for his sixth straight victory in the $10,000 World's Grand Championship Five-Gated Stake. This fabulous champion, owned by Dodge Stables, and ridden by Earl Teater will make two appearances during the September 12-13 Grand Championship event. Every fall since 1948, this brilliant Kentucky-owned chestnut has been awarded the World's Championship title at this show, a record that has never been approached by any saddle horse in history. The record will probably never be equalled, unless WING COMMANDER achieves this feat, himself, at the Golden Anniversary Horse Show in Louisville.

day, Mr. Alexander went on to Huntington, W. Va., where he entered the Venetian Hospital for a check-up. Mrs. Alexander remained in Ashland where she will visit for a few days.

Trade Schools In State Had 11,340 Trainees

Kentucky's trade schools had a total enrollment of 11,340 students for all types of classes in trade, industrial and distributive education during the last school year, Harold G. Wilson, director of Trades and Distributive Education for the State Department of Education reported today.

The group includes 8,170 trade and industrial education students, and 3,170 distributive education students. There were 316 teachers.

The trade and industrial education program had 5,164 evening trade extension students, 2,953 day high school students, 260 out-of-school youths, 619 day veterans and 734 part-time apprentices.

While the distributive education group included 809 evening extension students, 850 part-time students and 411 day co-operative high school students.

Occasionally we get a flirty look from some young thing, which is always enjoyed.

We are inclined to wonder whether the weather is ever normal.

AIR FORCE Secretary Talbott of the Air Force recently pointed out that modern airpower, combined with hydrogen and atomic weapons, have deprived this country of the traditional barriers, which in the past, have defended it. He pointed out that Soviet flares had at their disposal medium bombers capable of flying one-way missions to any point in the United States and that even more powerful aircraft were being developed by the Soviet Union.

Fleming County Fair Will Be Saturday, Sunday

The new Fleming County Fair and Horse Show, which will be held September 12-13, at the modern and well equipped Fleming County Fairgrounds, is this season's big "family" event. The fair committee has planned it to include interesting activities for all.

Floral Hall, which will be held in the modern six-room house on the grounds will provide an attractive background for the products of this area's top cooks, seamstresses, and handicraft workers. All exhibits must be present at the fairgrounds by Friday, September 11, at 4:00 p. m. Competent judges have been secured, and all exhibits will be arranged to their best advantage by Mrs. Roy Giehl, Mrs. Owen Emmons and Mrs. S. J. Rose. Floral Hall has been open to the public from 10:00 a. m. until 6:00 p. m., September 12. Exhibits will not be open Sunday.

A baby show for boys and girls eighteen months of age and younger will open the Saturday night show at 7:00 p. m. Always a favorite, this event is expected to attract a large number of contestants.

The first event of interest Sunday night will be a beauty contest for young women 16 to 20 years of age, inclusive.

To Hunt And Kill Is Instinct Of Man

From the earliest days of man's existence on the earth he has been a hunter. Over the period of thousands of years of hunting through necessity the desire to hunt and kill has been so deeply imbedded that it will never be fully subdued. The city dweller seldom gets chances to hunt since he is confined to urban areas where no game exists and where seeking a livelihood requires his full time.

When hunting season opens his animal and primitive man instincts are aroused and he decides to go hunting—but where to go? After driving 50 miles he finds a farm that looks like it should have game so he approaches the farmer to ask permission to hunt. The farmer noticing the license tags on the car as being from the big city refuses by saying he doesn't want his quail or rabbits killed.

In stating this the farmer fails to realize that the wildlife on his farm does not belong to him but to the people of the state and is held in trust by the state wildlife department. This does not give permission to trespass on land that belongs to the farmer.

The luckless hunter drives on to another farm and again asks permission from a landowner to hunt. This time the refusal comes because the farmer claims he lost some livestock due to hunters and doesn't allow hunting anymore. It may be true that the farmer lost a head of livestock as a result of hunters but he should realize that all hunters are not the same and a man requesting permission to hunt will be least likely to cause him any damage. Many reports of farmers' damages are false and dreamed up merely as an excuse to keep hunters off the property.

By this time our hunter is getting discouraged and exasperated since he has driven for half the morning and with his only day to hunt nearly half over he still has not set foot on game country nor fired a shot. He then decides that at the next field that looks good he will stop and without asking permission will go ahead and hunt. This he does.

The instant he steps into the field he is branded by all farmers as "a bunch of those d—city hunters who come to my farm every year and kill every rabbit and quail on the place." It has been the experience of the writer, after talking with many farmers, to be inclined to believe that farmers overestimate and maximize the damage done by hunters, which at times, is questionable whether the hunters are actually at fault.

Another question that comes up is that of potting land. Since hunters are going to hunt and farmers are going to pot land and neither will it be better to post a sign that reads "Hunting by Permission Only?"—At least with a sign like this the farmer will know who and how many hunters are on his land and he will receive less damage than by posting a sign which reads "No Hunting Allowed."

Farmers and landowners are quick to lose sight of the fact that without city hunters and their families who indirectly buy his produce he would soon go broke. Also when visiting the city he drives on streets paid for through city taxes. The farmer pays nothing for the upkeep of these streets. It is trespassing on city people's rights. Hardly.

In nearly every case should a hunter and a farmer learn to know each other they would like each other. The hunter who wants a place to hunt this fall should contact a farmer before the season, talk with him, buy a dozen eggs from him and learn to know him before the opening day of squirrel or rabbit season. If time permits, plan with him to improve the wildlife on the farm and help him set out Lepidoptera bicolor and Muliflora rose, which will do this. When arrangements have been made to hunt do not bring all the friends and family and ruin a good thing.

FISH AND FROG LEGS—Kenneth Eays, William H. Layne and Legrand Jayne were hosts to some 50 to 60 guests at the Jayne home on Tipton Avenue last Wednesday for a fish and frog leg outdoor dinner. Mr. Eays, a local jeweler, caught the fish (about 100 pounds of northern Pike) in Canada the previous week. Mayor Layne, quite a sportsman himself, took the frogs out of local streams during frogging season and kept them in a deep freezer. Part of the guests are seen in this picture.

THE CHIEFS—Mayor William Layne and Kenneth Eays tried their own fish and frogs for their outdoor dinner at the Legrand Jayne home Wednesday. The more than 50 guests ate more than 50 pounds of fish and three score frog legs. Afterwards moving pictures of Moreheadians fishing in Kentucky streams were shown on the lawn. Seen here are Eays, Joe Hodge and Layne.

LESS VEGETABLES

The Agriculture Department has suggested an over-all acreage reduction of five per cent for 14 winter vegetables to be marketed fresh, mostly in January, February and March, 1934. While there are no actual production controls, the Department suggested that plantings be limited to 230,700 acres. To be affected are beets, cabbage, carrots, cauliflower, celery, cucarbit, kale and lettuce.

Publisher Can't Be Buyer And Seller

A publishing firm is not entitled to be paid for publishing the annual statement of a county board of education if one of the board members is a substantial owner in the firm, it was held by Assistant Attorney General M. B. Hoffield.

The ruling was given to Howard H. Ogles, who owns a substantial interest in a Franklin newspaper which has published the annual report for some years past. Hoffield held if the contract and order for publishing the report was made before Ogles' election to the board it would be valid, but if made afterward "its collection (the bill) would forfeit your office."

Meeting Is Set For October 9

Commissioner of Motor Transportation John M. Kinnaird set October 9 for a conference with dairy and jobaco interests on proposed new rules for exempted commodities transported by contract motor carriers. The meeting was called after representatives of the groups expressed fear that proposed rules regulating freight rates of motor carriers might affect their interests.

Attendance At Electric Co-ops Is Gaining

190,000 Persons Attend Meetings During Past Year

Upwards of one-fifth of a million persons, primarily rural electric co-op members, attended 190,000 meetings of the joint Co-ops Annual Meetings and Electric Farm Shows recently completed. This annual affair, held in 32 rural electric co-op areas between July 6th and August 25th, gained an estimated combined attendance of 190,000 persons.

Highlights of the 1953 Annual Meeting and Electric Farm Show Caravan, which ran from open house through the following afternoon at each co-op site, was the co-op's business session, a fast moving and highly entertaining variety show, big contests, a wide range of display of electrical and mechanical home and farm appliances and equipment, and numerous prizes.

A total of 220 of rural Kentucky's prettiest young ladies, an average of ten per meeting, competed in the local Beauty Contest. The Beauty Queen of each co-op will participate in the State Beauty Contest at the Kentucky State Fair in Louisville on September 11, the opening day of the Fair. The State winner, in addition to an abundance of prizes, will receive an expenses-paid trip to Miami, Florida, in January to represent Kentucky in the Miss National Rural Electrification Contest.

A total of 138 4-H boys competed in the Tractor Driving Contest. The winning 4-H boys will determine their state tractor driving champion at the 1953 Kentucky State Fair.

The greatest contest participation at the 1953 Farm Shows was in the Handcuff Contest division, where a total of 372 entries was made at all 22 co-op meetings. The final in this division will also be judged at the Kentucky State Fair. And entries will be on exhibition at the Rural Electric Co-op tent during the entire course of the Fair.

The fourth and final contest of Rural Talent, drew a total of 144 entries at all 22 co-op meetings. Local winners will compete for the state championship during the course of the State Association's Annual Meeting in Louisville in October.

Local winners in all contests were awarded valuable prizes and ribbons, along with the opportunity of competing for even more valuable prizes and ribbons at their respective State Contests.

State Association Executive Manager J. K. Smith of Louisville, summed up the 1953 Annual Meetings and Electric Farm Shows with this comment:

Taking into consideration all factors—total attendance, quantity and quality of contest participation, the business session, dealer and educational exhibits, and the entertainment, along with the voiced opinions of hundreds of farmer-members, the folks for whom these meetings and shows are arranged, there can be little doubt that this year's Annual Meeting and Electric Farm Show must be rated the best of all the five years that this annual event has been staged."

LOBBYISTS

Registered lobbyists spent more than $200,000,000 in the first six months of this year to further "the legislative interests" of their clients. The heaviest spender among those represented was the National Association of Total Pulp Mills of America, which listed total outlays of $208,637 for the period. The Association of American Railroads was runner-up in total expenditures, having spent $119,338 in the same period.

Adept As Pacifier

It was Vinson's outstanding accomplishment to be able to persuade other men to go along with him. In Congress the New Deal liberals and the Southern Democrats were equally devoted to him. As economic stabilizer during World War I, he persuaded producers, consumers, and workers to adjust their conflicting interests for the sake of keeping down inflation.

But it was the Supreme Court that called forth Vinson's talents as great pacifier. With the death of the late Chief Justice Harlan F. Stone, a bitter personal feud between Justice Hugo L. Black and Justice Robert H. Jackson broke out into public view from the court chambers, where it had been raging for a long time.

No sooner had Truman made Vinson Chief Justice, in 1946, than no more was heard publicly about the Supreme Court cat-and-dog fight. Split decisions of 4-3 and 5-4 indicated that all was not tranquil on the bench.

Kept Lid On Court

Now and then a justice slid a sizzling statement about a colleague into a dissenting opinion. But Vinson kept the lid on such by siding one time with the conservative of the court and another time with the liberals, he maintained a balance.

Although he was supposed to be removed from the turmoil of public life, Vinson was a constant adviser to Truman. There was a direct telephone line between their bedrooms. Every time it had to be ditched Dean Acheson there was a report Vinson might become Secretary of State.

In fact, Truman had planned to send his Chief Justice on a critical mission during the 1948 presidential campaign. The President had reserved radio time to announce that he was sending Vinson to Moscow, but General George C. Marshall, then Secretary of State, intervened and caused a halt to the proposal.

Climax To Versatile Career

The Vinson appointment to the Supreme Court climaxed a series of jobs handed to him by Presidents Roosevelt and Truman in such rapid-fire fashion that it became a capital joke that while Kentucky was getting many important jobs, they were all going to the same Kentuckian.

In two of those jobs Vinson succeeded James F. Byrnes, the South Carolinian who had served in the Senate and on the Supreme Court, was Roosevelt's first head of the wartime Office of Economic Stabilization.

That agency was charged with waging the battle against wartime inflation. In May, 1943, Roosevelt made Byrnes "deputy president" by appointing him head of the Office of War Mobilization and he took Vinson off the federal bench in the District of Columbia and made him Byrnes' successor.

There Vinson served until March, 1945, when, in the backwash of the row over making Henry A. Wallace Secretary of Commerce, Roosevelt appointed Vinson head of the Federal Loan Administration, which had charge of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

He served less than a month in that job when, just a few days before his death, Roosevelt left Byrnes again as war mobilization and put Vinson in the post.

Pressed To Seek Senate

Thus he was a "deputy president" when Truman moved into the White House, a position of great importance and a great effort to induce Vinson to be a candidate for the Kentucky Senate seat that was to become vacant because of A. B. Chandler's appointment as baseball commissioner.

So great was the pressure that Allen W. Barkley, then Senate majority leader, made a vigorous argument to Truman that the party had a chance in its candidate. To that argument Truman replied that Barkley was asking him to sacrifice his good right arm.

Even after Truman made Vinson his Secretary of the Treasury in July, 1945, many Kentucky Democrats clung to the vain hope that he would be their standard-bearer in the 1946 Senate race—the race eventually won by Republican John Sherman Cooper.

Born In Jail

Born in the Louisa Jail—his father was jailed—January 22, 1890, Vinson got his A.B. degree from Centre College, Danville, in 1910 with an outstanding scholastic record. The next year he got his law degree from the same institution.

Professional baseball called to him briefly. Although he soon gave up his career with the Lexington team of the Bluegrass League, he continued his interest in sports to the end. He was watching a professional football game on television a few hours before he was stricken.

At 23 he became Commonwealth's attorney at Louisa. He entered the Army during World War I and was in an officer-training camp when the war ended.

Moved To Ashland

During those two years out of Congress he moved his home from Louisa to Ashland, but was back in Washington after the 1920 election.

He became head of the tax-writing subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee. He was known as a New Dealer, but he exasperated Republicans with his ability to persuade conservative Democrats to follow him.

Typical of that quality was his work in winning passage of the Guffey Coal Act, which eventually was declared unconstitutional. Leading the Republican opposition to the bill was the prominent Bertrand Snell, who said to the House:

"This is a remarkable situation. The majority of the subcommittee is against this bill, but they reported it to the full committee."

So great was the pressure that Allen W. Barkley, then Senate majority leader, made a vigorous argument to Truman that the party had a chance in its candidate. To that argument Truman replied that Barkley was asking him to sacrifice his good right arm.

During those two years out of Congress he moved his home from Louisa to Ashland, but was back in Washington after the 1920 election.

He became head of the tax-writing subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee. He was known as a New Dealer, but he exasperated Republicans with his ability to persuade conservative Democrats to follow him.

Typical of that quality was his work in winning passage of the Guffey Coal Act, which eventually was declared unconstitutional. Leading the Republican opposition to the bill was the prominent Bertrand Snell, who said to the House:

"This is a remarkable situation. The majority of the subcommittee is against this bill, but they reported it to the full committee."

So great was the pressure that Allen W. Barkley, then Senate majority leader, made a vigorous argument to Truman that the party had a chance in its candidate. To that argument Truman replied that Barkley was asking him to sacrifice his good right arm.

Even after Truman made Vinson his Secretary of the Treasury in July, 1945, many Kentucky Democrats clung to the vain hope that he would be their standard-bearer in the 1946 Senate race—the race eventually won by Republican John Sherman Cooper.

Born In Jail

Born in the Louisa Jail—his father was jailed—January 22, 1890, Vinson got his A.B. degree from Centre College, Danville, in 1910 with an outstanding scholastic record. The next year he got his law degree from the same institution.

Professional baseball called to him briefly. Although he soon gave up his career with the Lexington team of the Bluegrass League, he continued his interest in sports to the end. He was watching a professional football game on television a few hours before he was stricken.

At 23 he became Commonwealth's attorney at Louisa. He entered the Army during World War I and was in an officer-training camp when the war ended.

During those two years out of

The majority of the Ways and Means Committee is against it, but they reported it out. The majority of the House is against it, but you are going to pass it."

And, under Vinson's urgings, pass it the House did.

Among his other activities in the House, Vinson supported such welfare measures as the Social Security System and the railway retirement plan.

In 1937 Roosevelt appointed him to the Federal District Court for the District of Columbia, a tribunal that handled challenges made against many of the regulations promulgated by the New Deal's executive agencies. There he served until he took Byrnes' place as economic stabilizer.

NOTICE TO PARENTS OF CHILDREN WITH BICYCLES

It has come to our attention that many children are riding bikes through red lights and on sidewalks with disregard for the motorist and pedestrians. This must stop. We ask you to caution your children, else it will become necessary they be arrested and fined.
