As It Is Described By a Kentucky Sotter—A Feat That Has Forgotten All Review of theSituation.

An officer of the Third Kentucky Cavalry, who has been with the forces of General Sherman, has written a letter which is being published by the Telegraph, describing the battle and the events of the campaign. He says:

John Martis, who heads one of the companies of the Third Kentucky, lives in a ramshackle cabin near the edge of the forest, in the heart of Kentucky. He is a tall, spare, and50-year-old gentleman, with a keen eye and a quick mind. He is a good shot, and knows all about the country.

In the early part of the spring, John Martis went to the forest with a party of men, to hunt and gather wild flowers for the ladies of the regiment. They had been hunting for a week, and had seen many wild animals, including deer, rabbits, and squirrels. They had also found a sheltered spot where they could camp for the night. John Martis had brought his gun, and was ready to shoot anything that he saw.

The party started out early in the morning, and soon saw a herd of deer. John Martis fired his gun, and the deer ran away. They continued on their way, and soon came to a clearing. In the clearing, they found a nest of hawks. John Martis fired his gun again, and the hawks took flight. The party continued on their way, and soon came to a river. They crossed the river, and continued on their way.

In the evening, they came to a campsite. They built a fire, and ate their supper. John Martis was so tired that he fell asleep immediately.

The next morning, the party started out early. They came to a forest, and continued on their way. They saw many wild animals, including deer, rabbits, and squirrels. They also found a sheltered spot where they could camp for the night.

The party started out early in the morning, and soon saw a herd of deer. John Martis fired his gun, and the deer ran away. They continued on their way, and soon came to a river. They crossed the river, and continued on their way.

In the evening, they came to a campsite. They built a fire, and ate their supper. John Martis was so tired that he fell asleep immediately.

The next morning, the party started out early. They came to a forest, and continued on their way. They saw many wild animals, including deer, rabbits, and squirrels. They also found a sheltered spot where they could camp for the night.

The party started out early in the morning, and soon saw a herd of deer. John Martis fired his gun, and the deer ran away. They continued on their way, and soon came to a river. They crossed the river, and continued on their way.

In the evening, they came to a campsite. They built a fire, and ate their supper. John Martis was so tired that he fell asleep immediately.

The next morning, the party started out early. They came to a forest, and continued on their way. They saw many wild animals, including deer, rabbits, and squirrels. They also found a sheltered spot where they could camp for the night.

The party started out early in the morning, and soon saw a herd of deer. John Martis fired his gun, and the deer ran away. They continued on their way, and soon came to a river. They crossed the river, and continued on their way.

In the evening, they came to a campsite. They built a fire, and ate their supper. John Martis was so tired that he fell asleep immediately.

The next morning, the party started out early. They came to a forest, and continued on their way. They saw many wild animals, including deer, rabbits, and squirrels. They also found a sheltered spot where they could camp for the night.

The party started out early in the morning, and soon saw a herd of deer. John Martis fired his gun, and the deer ran away. They continued on their way, and soon came to a river. They crossed the river, and continued on their way.

In the evening, they came to a campsite. They build...