

The traditional Indian rock in the Ohio, on the bar, a few hundred yards southwest of the mouth of Buffalo Creek, has not shown so much of itself for a number of years. It can now be approached dry shod by stepping on boulders. At present its highest point is out of water one foot. Outside of the rock the water is one foot deep.