LOVE ENDS AN OLD FEUD.

THE ROWAN COUNTY, KENTUCKY, VENDETTA BROUGHT TO A CLOSE.

By the Marriage of Grace Martin and Frank Tolliver, Two Families Who for Ten Years Have Engaged in a Bloody Warfare Have Concluded to "Swear Off" and bury the Hatchet—Many Lives Have Been Sacrificed on Both Sides Since the Quarrel Started.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 10. [Special.]—Report from Pine Springs, Rowan County, Ky., and vicinity, states that there has been an end of the feud of Grace Martin and Frank Tolliver, whose families have been engaged in a bloody feud for several years. This union will put an end to the internecine Rowan County warfare in which so many lives have been sacrificed. The two contracting parties are each about 22 years of age and are daughter and brother respectively of the principals in the bloody Rowan County fact. Three children, all from the same family, were in the same school, and were named after the principals in the feud. At 3:7 this morning the clans commenced gathering, hard-visaged, horned-handed mountebanks, with keen eyes and erect bearing of the feudal Kuckuckian. If there was a certain restraint in the greeting of some as visions of dying faces flashed before them, those visions of bloodshed soon died away, and the two warring factions mixed with hearty cordiality. Mr. Tolliver, at 30 years of age, was elected Police Judge of Morehead and since then had complete mastery of the town. There were many indictments against Tolliver for various crimes, yet so terrifying were the people they allowed a criminal to hold office and exercise the rights of that office. After the election of Tolliver to the office of Police Judge three good citizens were compelled to flee from Morehead. Their lives, their fortunes, their families were in danger. In the reports of the elections Tolliver received twenty votes, thereby electing him. People who were against him were afraid to go to the polls, and a man who could not sign his name legally was elected to an office which requires knowledge of the law, equity of judgment, and justice in all things. Immediately after taking possession of his office he began the persecution of his foes. He issued warrants for the arrest of William Logan, aged 34, and his brother John, aged 18, charged with Ku-Kluxism. Warrants were placed in the hands of Marshal Mann to serve. Mann and Tolliver and posse went to the Logan house to serve the warrants on the two boys. Mann and Tolliver entered the house and searched for Mann. Immediately the Logan boys opened fire, ridding him with slugs from a shotgun and killing him instantly. As soon as the two boys made their appearance the posse opened fire, and Mann and Tolliver were both killed. It was only a matter of time before the two factions had no open hostility. In the vendetta more than twenty people have been killed.
